

No. _____

---

---

In the Supreme Court of the United States

ROBERT R. TOLAN,

Petitioner,

v.

JEFFREY WAYNE COTTON,

Respondent.

On Petition for Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

---

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

---

George R. Gibson
NATHAN SOMMERS JACOBS
2800 Post Oak Boulevard
61st Floor
Houston, Texas 77056
(713) 892-4843
Ggibson@nathansommers.com

Martin J. Siegel
Counsel of Record
LAW OFFICES OF
MARTIN J. SIEGEL, P.C.
Bank of America Center
700 Louisiana Street
Suite 2300
Houston, Texas 77002
(713) 226-8566
Martin@siegelfirm.com

Counsel for Petitioner

QUESTION PRESENTED

The Court's decisions have established a two-pronged test for a government official's claim to qualified immunity: (i) whether the official violated a constitutional right, and (ii) whether the right was clearly established in the specific context involved. In Fourth Amendment cases, the first prong asks whether the search or seizure was reasonable in light of the factual circumstances confronting the officer, while the second asks whether the search was reasonable under governing law. Both prongs involve reasonableness, but the Court has cautioned that they remain analytically distinct. Yet some lower courts, including the Fifth Circuit, bifurcate the second prong and separately ask whether the defendant's conduct was objectively unreasonable. This can result in factual reasonableness being considered in the second prong analysis though it is supposed to constitute the first prong test, as occurred here. The circuits are divided on whether this approach complies with the Court's precedents. See, e.g., Walczyk v. Rio, 496 F.3d 139, 166 (2007) (Sotomayor, J., dissenting).

Accordingly, the question presented is whether courts deciding qualified immunity in Fourth Amendment cases should consider the factual reasonableness of the search or seizure when applying the second, "clearly established" prong of the test.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

QUESTION PRESENTED ..... i

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ..... v

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI ..... 1

OPINIONS BELOW ..... 1

JURISDICTION ..... 1

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY
PROVISIONS INVOLVED ..... 1

INTRODUCTION ..... 2

STATEMENT OF THE CASE ..... 5

A. Officer Jeffrey Cotton’s Shooting of Robbie
Tolan ..... 5

B. The Decisions Below ..... 8

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION ... 10

I. The Fifth Circuit’s Decision Transforms the Second Prong of Qualified Immunity By Injecting Factual Reasonableness Into The Inquiry ..... 10

II. Circuit Courts Are Divided in How They Define and Apply the Second Prong of
Qualified Immunity ..... 13

III.	The Court Should Resolve the Confusion Surrounding Consideration of Factual Unreasonableness in the Qualified Immunity Analysis . . . . .	19
IV.	The Fifth Circuit’s Decision is Erroneous . .	25
	CONCLUSION . . . . .	27
APPENDIX
Appendix A	Opinion in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit (April 25, 2013) . . . . .	App. 1
Appendix B	Amended Final Summary Judgment in the United States District Court, Southern District of Texas, Houston Division (April 30, 2012) . . . . .	App. 20
Appendix C	(Corrected) Memorandum and Order on Jeffrey Wayne Cotton’s and John C. Edwards’s Motion for Summary Judgment in the United States District Court, Southern District of Texas, Houston Division (March 31, 2012) . . . . .	App. 22
Appendix D	On Petition for Rehearing En Banc in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit (August 1, 2013) . . . . .	App. 91

Appendix E Transcript Excerpts

Excerpts of Direct Examination of Robbie Tolan, in the District Court of Harris County, Texas, 232nd Judicial
District
(May 6, 2010) . . . . . App. 100

Excerpts of Robbie Tolan Deposition
Transcript
(October 26, 2010) . . . . . App. 102

Excerpts of Jeffrey Cotton Deposition
Transcript
(November 15, 2010) . . . . . App. 104

Excerpts of Direct Examination of
Marian Tolan, in the District Court of
Harris County, Texas, 232nd Judicial
District
(May 6, 2010) . . . . . App. 105

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

Abraham v. Raso , 183 F.3d 279 (3d Cir. 1999) . . . . .	23
Anderson v. Creighton , 483 U.S. 635 (1987) . . . . .	20
Ashcroft v. Al-Kidd , 131 S. Ct. 2074 (2011) . . . . .	11
BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore , 517 U.S. 559 (1996) . . . . .	22
Bailey v. Pataki , 708 F.3d 391 (2 <sup>d</sup> Cir. 2013) . . . . .	14
Baker v. Putnal , 75 F.3d 190 (5 th Cir. 1996) . . . . .	27
Brosseau v. Haugen , 543 U.S. 194 (2004) . . . . .	10, 27
Bunting v. Mellen , 541 U.S. 1019 (2004) . . . . .	21
Camreta v. Greene , 131 S. Ct. 2020 (2011) . . . . .	21
CarePartners LLC v. Lashway , 545 F.3d 867 (9 th Cir. 2008), cert. denied , 129 S. Ct. 2382 (2009) . . . . .	16

County of Sacramento v. Lewis , 523 U.S. 833 (1998) . . . . .	24
Cowan v. Breen , 352 F.3d 756 (2d Cir. 2003) . . . . .	18
Crawford-El v. Britton , 523 U.S. 574 (1998) . . . . .	20
Curley v. Klem , 499 F.3d 199 (3d Cir. 2007) . . . . .	17, 18, 24
Dunigan v. Noble , 390 F.3d 486 (6 th Cir. 2005) . . . . .	16
Elder v. Holloway , 510 U.S. 510 (1994) . . . . .	12
Estate of Escobedo v. Bender , 600 F.3d 770 (7 th Cir. 2010), cert. denied , 131 S. Ct. 463 (2010) . . . . .	18
Estate of Sorrells v. City of Dallas , 45 Fed. Appx. 325, 2002 WL 1899592 (5 th Cir.), cert. denied , 537 U.S. 1072 (2002) . . . . .	13
Felton v. Polles , 315 F.3d 470 (5 th Cir. 2002), overruled on other grounds, Burlington Northern &amp; Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. White , 548 U.S. 53 (2006) . . . . .	13
Gonzalez v. City of Schenectady , 728 F.3d 149 (2d Cir. 2013) . . . . .	14

Gould v. Davis , 165 F.3d 265 (4 th Cir. 1998) . . . . .	18
Graves v. Zachary , 277 Fed. Appx. 344 (5 th Cir. 2008) . . . . .	27
Grawey v. Drury , 567 F.3d 302 (6 th Cir. 2009) . . . . .	15
Hare v. City of Corinth , 135 F.3d 320 (5 th Cir. 1998) . . . . .	8, 12, 13
Harlow v. Fitzgerald , 457 U.S. 800 (1982) . . . . .	20
Hensley v. Gassman , 693 F.3d 681 (6 th Cir. 2012), cert. denied , 133 S. Ct. 1800 (2013) . . . . .	15
Higgins v. Penobscot County Sheriff's Dept. , 446 F.3d 11 (1 st Cir. 2006) . . . . .	24
Holzemer v. City of Memphis , 621 F.3d 512 (6 th Cir. 2010) . . . . .	15
Johnson v. Jones , 515 U.S. 304 (1995) . . . . .	11, 12
Jones v. United States , 527 U.S. 373 (1999) . . . . .	22
Kovacic v. Cuyahoga County Dept. of Children and Family Serv. , 724 F.3d 687 (6 th Cir. 2013) . . . . .	16

LaMont v. New Jersey , 637 F.3d 177 (3d Cir. 2011) . . . . .	18
Maldonado v. Fontanes , 568 F.3d 263 (1 st Cir. 2009) . . . . .	16
Mitchell v. Forsyth , 472 U.S. 511 (1985) . . . . .	11, 12
Morrison v. Bd. of Trustees Of Green Twp. , 583 F.3d 394 (6 th Cir. 2009) . . . . .	16
Ortiz v. Jordan , 131 S. Ct. 884 (2011) . . . . .	12
Palmer v. Johnson , 193 F.3d 346 (5 th Cir. 1999) . . . . .	13
Pearson v. Callahan , 555 U.S. 223 (2009) . . . . .	12, 20, 27
Quigley v. Tuong Vinh Thai , 707 F.3d 675 (6 th Cir. 2013) . . . . .	15
Reyes v. Bridgewater , 362 Fed. Appx. 403 (5 th Cir. 2010) . . . . .	27
Russo v. City of Bridgeport , 479 F.3d 196 (2d Cir.), cert. denied , 552 U.S. 818 (2007) . . . . .	15
Sample v. Bailey , 409 F.3d 689 (6 th Cir. 2005) . . . . .	16

Saucier v. Katz , 533 U.S. 194 (2001) . . . . .	passim
Scott v. Harris , 550 U.S. 372 (2007) . . . . .	5, 11
Spaziano v. Florida , 468 U.S. 447 (1984) . . . . .	22
Taravella v. Town of Walcott , 599 F.3d 129 (2d Cir. 2010) . . . . .	14, 15, 16, 20
Tarver v. Edna , 410 F.3d 745 (5 th Cir. 2005) . . . . .	13
Tennessee v. Garner , 471 U.S. 1 (1985) . . . . .	10, 26, 27
Torres v. City of Madera , 648 F.3d 1119 (9 th Cir. 2011), cert. denied , 132 S. Ct. 1032 (2012) . . . . .	17
Walczyk v. Rio , 496 F.3d 139 (2007) . . . . .	passim
Zalaski v. City of Hartford , 723 F.3d 382 (2d Cir. 2013) . . . . .	15

CONSTITUTION

U.S. Const. amend. IV . . . . .	passim
U.S. Const. amend. VII . . . . .	22

STATUTES

28 U.S.C. § 1254(1) ..... 1
42 U.S.C. § 1983 ..... 2, 3, 8

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Akil Reed Amar, The Bill of Rights as a Constitution, 100 YALE L. J. 1131 (March 1991) ..... 22

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Robbie Tolan respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the court of appeals is reported at 713 F.3d 299 and reprinted at Appendix A. The opinion of the district court is reported at 854 F. Supp. 2d 544 and reprinted at Appendix C. The opinion of Judges James L. Dennis and James E. Graves dissenting from the court's denial of rehearing en banc is reported at __ Fed. Appx. __, 2013 WL 3948950, and reprinted at Appendix D.

JURISDICTION

The court of appeals denied rehearing en banc on August 1, 2013. App. D. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The Fourth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

42 U.S.C. § 1983 provides:

Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress, except that in any action brought against a judicial officer for an act or omission taken in such officer's judicial capacity, injunctive relief shall not be granted unless a declaratory decree was violated or declaratory relief was unavailable. For the purposes of this section, any Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia shall be considered to be a statute of the District of Columbia.

INTRODUCTION

In 2008, a Bellaire, Texas police officer named Jeffrey Cotton shot Robbie Tolan while Tolan was on his knees on his own front porch. Cotton suspected Tolan of car theft because another officer had incorrectly entered Tolan's license plate number in a computer, yielding an erroneous match with a stolen vehicle. Cotton arrived on the scene and, within a few seconds, slammed Tolan's mother into the Tolans' garage door without provocation. This prompted Tolan, who was unarmed, to exclaim “get your fucking hands off my mom” and start to rise from the ground where he had been laying as ordered. Cotton then turned to face Tolan, drew his pistol, and shot Tolan in the chest. He claimed Tolan looked like he was reaching for a gun in his waistband, though Tolan testified he made no such gesture but merely started to stand up.

A state grand jury indicted Cotton for shooting Tolan, but he was acquitted at trial. After Tolan brought this suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 alleging violation of the Fourth Amendment, the district court dismissed on summary judgment and the Fifth Circuit affirmed. Three judges voted to rehear the appeal en banc and two joined a dissenting opinion from the denial of Tolan’s motion for rehearing.

Although the district court held that the shooting did not violate the Fourth Amendment and therefore dismissed under the first prong of qualified immunity, the Fifth Circuit affirmed under the second prong, which asks whether the right allegedly violated was clearly established. But in supposedly applying the second prong, the court actually performed the analysis that constitutes the first prong and decided that Cotton acted reasonably considering the facts of the encounter. This happened because the Fifth Circuit bifurcates the second prong of qualified immunity in Fourth Amendment cases and asks, not only whether the law was clearly established when applied to the facts at hand, but also whether the defendant’s conduct was objectively unreasonable in light of that law. This formulation allows lower courts to consider the factual unreasonableness of the search or seizure as part of the second prong despite this Court's teaching that the two prongs should remain distinct and that factual unreasonableness is part of the first prong. See Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 204-06 (2001). Two other circuits also subdivide the "clearly established" prong this way, though panels and judges within those circuits have vigorously disagreed on whether the practice adheres to this Court's precedent.

The Court should grant the petition to resolve the split in how courts interpret the second prong of qualified immunity. Injecting factual unreasonableness into what is supposed to be the purely legal, second prong immunity analysis will result in far fewer decisions resolving the merits of Fourth Amendment claims, and therefore less guidance to officials who need to know the boundaries of constitutionally permissible conduct. It will further diminish the crucial role of juries in establishing what is reasonable under the Fourth Amendment. And as then-Judge Sotomayor recognized when dissenting from the Second Circuit's similarly bifurcated version of the second prong, it will "give defendants a second bite at the immunity apple, thereby thwarting a careful balance that the Supreme Court has struck" in fashioning the doctrine of qualified immunity. Walczyk, 496 F.3d at 166 (Sotomayor, J., dissenting). The Court should therefore review this case, reverse the decision below, and permit Tolan's claim to proceed to trial.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Officer Jeffrey Cotton's Shooting of Robbie Tolan

Because the district court dismissed Tolan's claim on summary judgment, what follows are "the plaintiff's version of the facts." Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 378 (2007).

Shortly before 2:00 a.m. on December 31, 2008, Tolan and his cousin were driving home from a Jack in the Box restaurant to Tolan's house in Bellaire, Texas, a suburb of Houston. App. 2-3. Tolan was 23 years old at the time. Bellaire police officer John Edwards drove behind Tolan's Nissan Xterra and decided to follow it when Tolan made what Edwards thought was a sudden turn onto a residential side street. Id. Several cars in the area had been burglarized the night before. Id.

Tolan parked in front of his house. App. 3. As Edwards drove past Tolan's car, he incorrectly typed Tolan's license plate number into his mobile data terminal. Id. This produced an erroneous match with a stolen vehicle, though the Tolans actually owned the Xterra. Id. Edwards then parked nearby. Id. When Tolan and his cousin got out of the Xterra and began walking up the driveway with bags of food, Edwards turned his police cruiser's light on them, got out of his car, pointed his gun and flashlight at the pair, and told them to get down on the ground. Id. He also told them he thought Tolan's car was stolen. Id.

Tolan and his cousin did not immediately lie down as commanded but instead told Edwards the car belonged to Tolan and that they lived there. App. 3-4, 101. They did not curse at Edwards, as the panel's opinion recounts, but merely spoke to him. App. 101. Alerted by the commotion in their front yard, Tolan's parents came out of the house in their pajamas and also explained to Edwards that Tolan was their son, that this was their home, and that the car was not stolen. App. 3-4, 97. They instructed their son and cousin to lie down as Edwards had ordered, and both complied. Id. Tolan lay on the porch with his arms outstretched facing the front door. App. 4.

A second Bellaire police officer, Jeffrey Cotton, heard Edwards's radio report and drove to the Tolans' home. Id. He testified that he thought Edwards was in danger. Id. When Cotton arrived, Tolan and his cousin were lying down, Tolan's father was standing in the driveway as ordered by Edwards, and Tolan's mother was talking to Edwards. Id. Cotton got out of his car, drew his gun, and approached Edwards, who told him Tolan had gotten out of "the stolen vehicle." Id. The scene was illuminated by floodlights over the garage, a lantern in the yard, and Edwards's police car and flashlight. App. 96. The front porch where Tolan was laying was reasonably well-lit. Id. Cotton, however, testified that it was "fairly dark." App. 4.

Cotton saw Tolan's mother walking in front of and talking to Edwards and told her to move aside. She responded, "Me? Are you kidding me? We've lived here 15 years. We've never had anything like this happen." App. 41. She also calmly told Cotton that the Xterra was not stolen, that the family lived there, and that Tolan was their son. App. 30, 96. Cotton holstered his gun, grabbed Tolan's mother's right arm, and slammed her into the garage door. App. 30-31, 96.

Reacting to the sound of his mother hitting the door, Tolan exclaimed "get your fucking hands off my mom" and started to rise. App. 5-6. In order to stand, he pulled his arms back toward his chest and pushed up. Id., App. 32. He began to turn and get up "pretty quickly," but as he testified: "I didn't jump up off the ground. I just simply got up. Started to get up." App. 75. "Before I could stand up, I was shot." Id. "I didn't run at him. I didn't jump up and make any crazy movements," Tolan explained. App. 102.

"Without issuing any warning, Cotton unholstered his weapon, pointed it at [Tolan] and shot at him three times, striking him once in the chest." App. 98. He was 15-20 feet away from Tolan, who was unarmed. App. 5-6. Tolan testified that he was on his knees when he was shot and had not made any gesture toward or away from his midsection or waist. App. 76, 98. Cotton and Edwards testified that Tolan was in a crouching position and poised to charge, and Cotton stated that he believed Tolan was drawing a gun from his waistband. App. 6, 49-50, 52. Cotton said that he exclaimed "stop" or "no" before shooting, but that this was not said as a warning. App. 104. The Tolans testified that Cotton did not say anything but simply pointed and fired. App. 106. Tolan survived the shooting, though the bullet collapsed his lung and remains lodged in his liver. App. 98. Before he shot Tolan, Cotton had only been on the scene for 32 seconds. App. 6.

B. The Decisions Below

A Harris County, Texas grand jury indicted Cotton for aggravated assault for shooting Tolan, but he was acquitted at trial. App. 6. Tolan sued Cotton under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for using excessive force in violation of the Fourth Amendment. App. 72. Following discovery, the district court granted summary judgment to Cotton on the ground that the shooting did not violate Tolan's Fourth Amendment rights. App. 72-90.

A panel of the Fifth Circuit affirmed the summary judgment, but on a different ground. App. A. It purported to skip the first prong of qualified immunity relating to the merits of Tolan's Fourth Amendment claim and proceeded directly to the second prong, which it defined "as two separate inquiries":

whether the allegedly violated constitutional rights were clearly established at the time of the incident; and, if so, whether the conduct of the defendants was objectively unreasonable in the light of that then clearly established law.

App. 10 (emphasis in original) (quoting Hare v. City of Corinth, 135 F.3d 320, 326 (5th Cir. 1998)). The court concluded Cotton acted reasonably and was therefore entitled to immunity in light of the facts of the situation, such as the mistaken report of a stolen car, Tolan's "verbally threatening [Cotton] and getting up from his prone position," and "surrounding circumstances" including "the late hour; recent criminal activity in the area; a dimly-lit front porch; Marian Tolan's refusing orders to remain quiet and calm; and the Officers' being outnumbered on the scene.” App. 14-15. Id. The court also cited testimony from Cotton’s use-of-force experts and the fact that Tolan’s movement violated Texas law requiring obedience to police officers. App. 15-16.

Tolan petitioned for rehearing en banc, which the court denied. App. D. Three judges voted to rehear the appeal, however, and two dissented from the denial of Tolan’s petition in a written opinion. See id. In his dissent, Judge Dennis, joined by Judge Graves, explained how the panel misconceived the qualified immunity test:

the panel opinion, in making a purported second-prong inquiry, fails entirely to assess whether an objective officer in Cotton’s position could have made a mistake of law and instead performs what appears to be an erroneous, partial, and distorted Saucier first-prong analysis to conclude that summary judgment based on qualified immunity is proper.

App. 95. This led the panel to grant summary judgment despite “genuine issues as to material facts whether Cotton objectively and reasonably feared for his life when he shot to kill Robbie.” Id. Those factual disputes include how Tolan started to stand and whether he was on his knees, how he used his hands in the moments before he was shot, whether Cotton gave any warning before firing, the level of visibility, how Tolan’s mother behaved, and how Cotton handled her. App. 96-98. When the facts are considered in Tolan’s favor, the dissent concluded, a jury could readily find that shooting Tolan was unnecessary and that Cotton violated Tolan's clearly established Fourth Amendment rights. App. 99.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

I. The Fifth Circuit's Decision Transforms the Second Prong of Qualified Immunity By Injecting Factual Reasonableness Into The Inquiry

1. Two questions must be answered when a defendant asserts qualified immunity. The first is: "Taken in the light most favorable to the party asserting the injury, do the facts alleged show the officer's conduct violated a constitutional right?" Saucier, 533 U.S. at 201. In a Fourth Amendment case like this, officers commit a violation when they use deadly force unreasonably, that is, in the absence of an imminent threat of death or serious injury to themselves or others. See Brosseau v. Haugen, 543 U.S. 194, 197-98 (2004); Tennessee v. Garner, 471 U.S. 1, 11-12 (1985). There is no violation where the officer makes a reasonable but factually incorrect judgment that the plaintiff poses a serious danger: "If an officer reasonably, but mistakenly, believed that a suspect was likely to fight back, for instance, the officer would be justified in using more force than in fact was needed." Saucier, 533 U.S. at 205.

The second question asks whether the right the plaintiff alleges to have been violated was clearly established at the time of the incident. See Saucier, 533 U.S. at 201. This prong permits dismissal if the officer reasonably misjudged the law rather than the facts:

An officer might correctly perceive all of the relevant facts but have a mistaken understanding as to whether a particular amount of force is legal in those circumstances. If the officer's mistake as to what the law requires is reasonable, however, the officer is entitled to the immunity defense.

Saucier, 533 U.S. at 205; see also Ashcroft v. Al-Kidd, 131 S. Ct. 2074, 2085 (2011) (“Qualified immunity gives government officials breathing room to make reasonable but mistaken judgments about open legal questions”). This inquiry ensures an officer had fair warning his conduct was unlawful before he is found liable or even forced to defend the suit. See Saucier, 533 U.S. at 202.

Thus, in a Fourth Amendment case, both prongs of the qualified immunity test require assessing whether the officer acted reasonably. See id. at 203-04. But while the first prong is factual and goes to the merits of the plaintiff's claim, the second is legal and assesses the defendant's assertion of immunity. Under the first prong, courts and juries must “slosh [their] way through the factbound morass of ‘reasonableness’” to determine whether a seizure violates the Fourth Amendment. Scott, 550 U.S. at 383. Under the second, the court confronts “a legal issue that can be decided with reference only to undisputed facts and in isolation from the remaining issues of the case.” Johnson v. Jones, 515 U.S. 304, 313 (1995) (quoting Mitchell v.

Forsyth, 472 U.S. 511, 530 n. 10 (1985)); accord Ortiz v. Jordan, 131 S. Ct. 884, 892-93 (2011); Elder v. Holloway, 510 U.S. 510, 516 (1994). The two prongs should remain analytically separate, see Saucier, 533 U.S. at 204; Johnson, 515 U.S. at 312, and courts may choose to resolve the case by addressing only one of them. See Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 236-43 (2009).

2. Rather than apply this Court's precedent defining and distinguishing the two prongs of qualified immunity, the Fifth Circuit jumbles them together and injects merits-related factual reasonableness into the purely legal, second prong immunity analysis. This approach began in a decision predating Saucier. In Hare, the Fifth Circuit announced that the second prong "is better understood as two separate inquiries." 135 F.3d at 326. The first of these is whether the right at issue was clearly established, while the second is "whether the conduct of the defendants was objectively unreasonable in the light of that then clearly established law." Id. By subdividing the second prong this way, the court licensed consideration of factual reasonableness as part of the immunity analysis rather than the merits. In Hare, for instance, the court found the defendants immune under the second prong based on the facts of the case rather than any reasonable legal misunderstanding by officials. See id. at 329 ("we hold that the undisputed facts, viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmovant, do not constitute objectively unreasonable conduct when applied against the deliberate indifference standard").

Decisions after Hare have defined the second prong the same way.<sup>1</sup> And the court repeated the error in this case. The panel’s opinion describes what happened, considers whether Cotton could reasonably have felt in “fear for his life,” notes that “underlying assumptions” about Tolan turned out “to be erroneous” in hindsight, and calls the shooting a “tragic... mistake of fact.” App. 15, 17. This is a first prong analysis about whether the shooting was reasonable in light of the events that occurred on the scene. It has nothing to do with the legal, second prong question whether applicable law was sufficiently settled in this context for Cotton to appreciate that his conduct was unlawful. The court committed this error because it used the circuit’s qualified immunity test first enunciated in Hare, which predates Saucier’s clarification of the two different prongs. As the dissent from denial of rehearing en banc correctly puts it, the panel performed “something that it called a second-prong legal analysis but which has all the earmarks of a first-prong fact-intensive inquiry.” App. 95.

II. Circuit Courts Are Divided in How They Define and Apply the Second Prong of Qualified Immunity

1. The Fifth Circuit’s decision highlights two related divisions in how courts of appeals approach the second prong of qualified immunity. First, the decision echoes the split among and even within circuits about whether objective unreasonableness should be a separate or third element plaintiffs have to prove to overcome the defense. For example, the Second Circuit is divided about whether the qualified immunity test has two or three prongs, the third resembling the Fifth Circuit's bifurcated scheme and asking, "even if the right was 'clearly established,' whether it was 'objectively reasonable' for the officer to believe the conduct at issue was lawful." Gonzalez v. City of Schenectady, 728 F.3d 149, 154 (2d Cir. 2013); see Bailey v. Pataki, 708 F.3d 391, 404 n. 8 (2<sup>d</sup> Cir. 2013) ("There is some tension in our Circuit's cases as to whether the qualified immunity standard is of two or three parts, and whether the "reasonable officer" inquiry is part of step two – the "clearly established" prong – or whether it is a separate, third step in the analysis"); Taravella v. Town of Walcott, 599 F.3d 129, 136 (2d Cir. 2010) (Straub, J., dissenting) (collecting two-step and three-step decisions).

---

<sup>1</sup> See, e.g., Tarver v. Edna, 410 F.3d 745, 750 (5th Cir. 2005); Felton v. Polles, 315 F.3d 470, 477 (5th Cir. 2002), overruled on other grounds, Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. White, 548 U.S. 53 (2006); Estate of Sorrells v. City of Dallas, 45 Fed. Appx. 325, 2002 WL 1899592 at * 2 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1072 (2002); Palmer v. Johnson, 193 F.3d 346, 351 (5th Cir. 1999).

Then-Judge Sotomayor pointed out that the Second Circuit's "approach splits the single question of whether a right is 'clearly established' into two distinct steps, contrary to Supreme Court precedent." Walczyk, 496 F.3d at 166 (Sotomayor, J., dissenting). As she explained:

Contrary to what our case law might suggest, the Supreme Court does not follow this 'clearly established' inquiry with a second, ad hoc inquiry into the reasonableness of the officer's conduct. Once we determine whether the right at issue was clearly established for the particular context that the officer faced, the qualified immunity inquiry is complete.

Id. at 166-67. Other judges on that court have agreed with Justice Sotomayor. See Taravella, 599 F.3d at 138 (Straub, J., dissenting) (“we run the risk that lower courts will interpret the third step – the ‘objective reasonableness’ inquiry – as a hurdle that is somehow distinct from, and in addition to, the ‘reasonableness’ inquiry that is already a part of the second step”). And some panels have simply ignored the intra-circuit conflict, disregarded the circuit’s own precedent, and applied the standard two-pronged test from Saucier. See, e.g., Zalaski v. City of Hartford, 723 F.3d 382, 388 (2d Cir. 2013); Russo v. City of Bridgeport, 479 F.3d 196, 211 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 818 (2007).

There is analogous division within the Sixth Circuit. Some panels apply a three-part test and ask a third question about reasonableness akin to that employed in the Fifth and Second Circuits: “whether the plaintiff has offered sufficient evidence to indicate that what the official allegedly did was objectively unreasonable in light of the clearly established constitutional rights” Holzemer v. City of Memphis, 621 F.3d 512, 519 (6th Cir. 2010). Other decisions note that this third question need only be considered “in some instances” to “increase the clarity of the proper analysis” – leaving it uncertain when and whether the test has two or three parts. See, e.g., Quigley v. Tuong Vinh Thai, 707 F.3d 675, 681 n. 2 (6th Cir. 2013); Hensley v. Gassman, 693 F.3d 681, 687 n. 5 (6th Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 133 S. Ct. 1800 (2013). One panel called the third step “redundant” in excessive force cases, Grawey v. Drury, 567 F.3d 302, 309 (6th Cir. 2009); another objected to it as inconsistent with Saucier, see Dunigan v. Noble, 390 F.3d 486, 491 n. 6 (6th Cir. 2005); but a third disagreed and reaffirmed it. See Sample v. Bailey, 409 F.3d 689, 696 n. 3 (6th Cir. 2005). Still other Sixth Circuit panels simply ignore the third question altogether and use the two-pronged Saucier formulation. See, e.g., Kovacic v. Cuyahoga County Dept. of Children and Family Serv., 724 F.3d 687, 695 (6th Cir. 2013); Morrison v. Bd. of Trustees Of Green Twp., 583 F.3d 394, 400 (6th Cir. 2009).

Other circuits have also struggled with whether to include a third prong requiring a separate and additional inquiry into objective reasonableness. See, e.g., Maldonado v. Fontanes, 568 F.3d 263, 269 (1st Cir. 2009) (abandoning three-part test with third question on objective reasonableness in favor of Saucier's two-part analysis); CarePartners LLC v. Lashway, 545 F.3d 867, 876 n. 6 (9th Cir. 2008) ("We have previously expressed the qualified immunity test as both a two-step test and a three-step test"), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 2382 (2009). As Second Circuit Judge Straub points out, "the case law is divided, not only in our Circuit, but also in courts around the country. Several circuits have used a three-step analysis, even after the Supreme Court mandated a two-step inquiry in Saucier.... [C]ourts have been inconsistent in their treatment of the proper standard for qualified immunity." Taravella, 599 F.3d at 138 n. 2 (Straub, J., dissenting).

2. Second, the Fifth Circuit's consideration of factual reasonableness as part of the second prong analysis creates a further split with other circuits. Other courts have sought to maintain Saucier's basic distinction between the merits and immunity. As the Ninth Circuit observed in a recent case: “While the constitutional violation prong concerns the reasonableness of the officer’s mistake of fact, the clearly established prong concerns the reasonableness of the officer’s mistake of law.” Torres v. City of Madera, 648 F.3d 1119, 1127 (9th Cir. 2011) (emphasis in original), cert. denied, 132 S. Ct. 1032 (2012). Qualified immunity did not apply in that case because “there could be no reasonable mistake that [the officer’s] use of force was proscribed by law.” Id. at 1128.

Similarly, the Third Circuit considered a case where the district court asked the jury whether the officer’s “mistake in firing his weapon [was] objectively reasonable.” Curley v. Klem, 499 F.3d 199, 204 (3d Cir. 2007). When the jury answered affirmatively, the court held that the officer enjoyed qualified immunity. See id. at 204-05. The Third Circuit affirmed but held that the district court erred in considering the jury’s objective reasonableness answer to determine immunity; “the question as framed actually pertains to whether there was any constitutional violation at all.” Id. at 211. As the court explained:

The immunity step of the Saucier test is typically focused on established legal standards and requires a review of relevant case law, a review a jury simply cannot undertake. However, the constitutional analysis focuses on the factual circumstances of the incident and asks whether the officer made a reasonable mistake of fact. Question Three did exactly that. It asked not whether Trooper Klem made a mistake of law – wrongly believing that it was legal to shoot the wrong person – but whether it was reasonable for him to make the factual mistake of believing Officer Curley was the armed and dangerous Bailey.

Id. at 214 (citations omitted). This view of qualified immunity follows Saucier precisely but differs completely from the Fifth Circuit’s treatment of factual reasonableness as part of the second prong evaluation. See also LaMont v. New Jersey, 637 F.3d 177, 185 (3d Cir. 2011) (“In short, the dispute in this case is about the facts, not the law. The doctrine of qualified immunity is therefore inapposite”).

Other circuits have also maintained the proper division between the two prongs. See, e.g., Estate of Escobedo v. Bender, 600 F.3d 770, 779 n. 3 (7th Cir. 2010) (objective reasonableness of officers’ tactics in using force relates to first prong of qualified immunity analysis, not second), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 463 (2010); Cowan v. Breen, 352 F.3d 756, 762 (2d Cir. 2003) (“if the analysis focuses on whether an officer made a reasonable mistake of fact that justified his conduct, what is being examined is whether there was a constitutional violation, not whether the officer is entitled to qualified immunity”); Gould v. Davis, 165 F.3d 265, 273 (4th Cir. 1998) (“The question in qualified immunity is not whether the officers acted ‘reasonably’ in the sense in which that term is used in tort law. The question is whether a reasonable person would have known about controlling law, once that law is deemed to have been clearly established under the second prong”). The Fifth Circuit’s decision illustrates how subdividing the second prong to require separate proof of objective unreasonableness leads to the misapplication of the test for qualified immunity, giving rise to a further circuit split.

III. The Court Should Resolve the Confusion Surrounding Consideration of Factual Unreasonableness in the Qualified Immunity Analysis

There are four important reasons to address the division and uncertainty over how lower courts account for factual unreasonableness when deciding qualified immunity.

First, then-Judge Sotomayor has explained how subdividing the second prong and considering reasonableness as a separate component or as a third question altogether alters the balance struck by the qualified immunity doctrine and makes it unduly difficult for plaintiffs to recover for constitutional violations. As she wrote when dissenting from the Second Circuit's practice of treating reasonableness as a separate third step:

I recognize that the distinction I am drawing is a fine one, but I believe it has real consequences. Our approach does not simply divide into two steps what the Supreme Court treats singly, asking first, whether the right is clearly established as a general proposition, and second, whether the application of the general right to the facts of this case is something a reasonable officer could be expected to anticipate. Instead, we permit courts to decide that official conduct was "reasonable" even after finding that it violated clearly established law in the particularized sense. By introducing reasonableness as a separate step, we give defendants a second bite at the immunity apple, thereby thwarting a careful balance that the Supreme Court has struck “between the interests in vindication of citizens’ constitutional rights and in public officials’ effective performance of their duties.”

Walczyk, 496 F.3d at 168-69 (Sotomayor, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original) (quoting Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 639 (1987)).

This Court has long recognized that, “[i]f the law was clearly established, the immunity defense ordinarily should fail, since a reasonably competent public official should know the law governing his conduct.” Crawford-El v. Britton, 523 U.S. 574, 591 (1998) (quoting Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818-19 (1982)). But repeating consideration of factual reasonableness when resolving the second prong – giving defendants the “second bite at the immunity apple” then-Judge Sotomayor described – risks immunizing unconstitutional behavior even when the defendant should have known what the law demanded in the situation at hand. It also places a thumb on the scale in favor of the defendant by erecting an extra and wholly unnecessary hurdle for the plaintiff. See Taravella, 599 F.3d at 138 (Straub, J., dissenting)

Second, considering factual reasonableness when analyzing immunity rather than the merits will slow the development of Fourth Amendment law. Although Pearson permits lower courts to skip the first prong, confronting that step in appropriate cases remains essential. When a court considers the first prong, finds a violation, but then confers immunity under the second prong, it “says ‘Although this official is immune from damages today, what he did violates the Constitution and he or anyone else who does that thing again will be personally liable.’” Camreta v. Greene, 131 S. Ct. 2020, 2029 (2011). Such rulings “promote clarity – and observance – of constitutional rules” in the future, just as repeated avoidance of constitutional questions through immunity “threatens to leave standards of official conduct permanently in limbo.” Id. at 2030-31. “Qualified immunity thus may frustrate the development of constitutional precedent and the promotion of law-abiding behavior.” Id. at 2031 (citations and quotations omitted); see also Bunting v. Mellen, 541 U.S. 1019, 1024 (2004) (Scalia, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari).

The danger of excessive constitutional avoidance in Fourth Amendment cases rises considerably if lower courts can decide factual reasonableness as part of the legal immunity inquiry. Whether a search or use of force was reasonable in light of the facts of the incident determines the merits of a Fourth Amendment claim. If that question is shunted into the second prong intended to resolve immunity, as the Fifth Circuit framework encourages and as occurred in this case, courts will have even fewer occasions to examine specific law enforcement practices and decide whether they comply with the Constitution. Fewer cases will serve the valuable purpose of developing constitutional precedent and promoting law-abiding behavior among officers who depend on specific guidance from the courts. More disputes on the merits will be decided under the guise of determining immunity. The first prong, created to sort out the facts of the case and set the constitutional boundaries governing official action, will have little to do if the Fifth Circuit's approach stands.

Third, importing factual reasonableness into the immunity prong will diminish the vital role juries play in establishing what is reasonable under the Fourth Amendment. Juries represent the "conscience" or "voice" of the community. See, e.g., Jones v. United States, 527 U.S. 373, 382 (1999) (capital sentencing); BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559, 600 (1996) (Scalia, J., dissenting) (punitive damages). Deciding whether conduct is reasonable is typically a jury function. Juries "are more representative institutions than is the judiciary; they reflect more accurately the composition and experiences of the community as a whole, and inevitably make decisions based on community values more reliably, than can that segment of the community that is selected for service on the bench." Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. 447, 486-87 (1984) (Stevens, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

Juries were meant to play a central role in determining and policing the reasonableness of government action under the Fourth Amendment. See, e.g., Akil Reed Amar, The Bill of Rights as a Constitution, 100 YALE L. J. 1131, 1180 (March 1991) ("Reasonableness vel non was a classic question of fact for the jury; and the Seventh Amendment, in combination with the Fourth, would require the federal government to furnish a jury to any plaintiff-victim who demanded one, and protect that jury's finding of fact from being overturned by any judge or other government official”). Today too, juries perform this invaluable service. As the Third Circuit recognized in an excessive force case, “since we lack a clearly defined rule for declaring when conduct is unreasonable in a specific context, we rely on the consensus required by a jury decision to help ensure that the ultimate legal judgment of ‘reasonableness’ is itself reasonable and widely shared.” Abraham v. Raso, 183 F.3d 279, 289-90 (3d Cir. 1999).

Yet by shifting factual reasonableness into the “clearly established” inquiry, the Fifth Circuit’s approach restricts the ability of juries to define what should qualify as reasonable under the Fourth Amendment in an encounter like Tolan’s shooting. Because deciding whether the law is clearly established is reserved to the court as a legal matter, resolving cases under the second prong as formulated by the Fifth Circuit cuts juries out of the task of assessing whether actions by officers are factually reasonable. As a result, Fourth Amendment law will increasingly lack the essential input of ordinary citizens, while judges assume the task of parsing through questions of fact better suited to jurors. That is what occurred here – the panel sloshed through the facts of the incident and decided to render a judgment on whether Cotton reasonably appeared threatened by Tolan, but then it used that factual determination to make what is supposed to be an entirely legal decision on immunity.

Fourth, the Court should grant certiorari to bring clarity and uniformity to lower courts’ treatment of qualified immunity. Justice Ginsberg correctly predicted in Saucier that asking courts to navigate two forms of reasonableness in Fourth Amendment qualified immunity cases “holds large potential to confuse.” 533 U.S. at 210 (Ginsberg, J., concurring). The Third Circuit agreed in Curley, observing that the task “presents perplexing logical and practical problems.” 499 F.3d at 208. “Confusion between the threshold constitutional inquiry and the immunity inquiry is... understandable given the difficulty courts have had in elucidating the difference between those two analytical steps.” Id. at 214. This confusion accounts for the panel’s decision in this case and the split among and within the circuits on how to define and apply the second prong.

Moreover, whether factual reasonableness is assessed under the first or second prong affects the outcomes of cases. For example, qualified immunity is unavailable when a plaintiff seeks injunctive relief. See County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 841 n. 5 (1998). In those cases, deciding the merits of the plaintiff’s constitutional claim will be complicated by the widespread confusion between the two prongs. See Higgins v. Penobscot County Sheriff’s Dept., 446 F.3d 11, 17 (1st Cir. 2006) (Howard, J., concurring). This alone makes the matter more than “merely theoretical,” as Judge Howard of the First Circuit put it in urging clarification. See id. More broadly, dispelling the confusion surrounding qualified immunity and ensuring plaintiffs and government officials receive uniform treatment across circuits and panels is a worthwhile goal in its own right.

IV. The Fifth Circuit's Decision is Erroneous

Finally, the Fifth Circuit erred in granting summary judgment. As the dissent from denial of rehearing en banc confirms, the parties dispute the key facts relating to whether Tolan reasonably appeared to pose a serious threat to Cotton. App. 96-98. These include whether the area was well-lit; whether Tolan's mother behaved calmly or was disruptive and thereby heightened the tension on the scene; whether Cotton slammed Tolan's mother into the garage door; whether Tolan leapt to his feet in a crouch and was poised to charge forward to intervene, or simply started to stand up and made it to his knees before being shot; and whether Tolan made a motion with his hands that could reasonably be seen as reaching for a gun in his waistband – as Cotton testified but Tolan emphatically disputed. See id.

If the evidence is construed in Tolan's favor, as it must be, a jury could easily find that it was unreasonable to regard Tolan as a life-threatening danger. App. 97-98. It could find Cotton should have been able to see what was happening on the porch because it was adequately illuminated. See id. It could conclude the Tolans gave Cotton ample reason to doubt that Tolan should be approached as a potentially hostile or armed car thief; after all, Tolan's parents were middle-aged homeowners in their pajamas who repeatedly and credibly told both officers that the supposedly stolen vehicle belonged to Tolan, that they lived there, and that Tolan was their son. See id. It could find Cotton violently threw Tolan's mother into the garage door, though she was only calmly talking to the other officer. See id. Above all, a jury could decide Tolan did nothing more than say something challenging and get to his knees – for which he was shot in the chest and nearly killed. See id. “Robbie had no weapon and had not made any sort of reaching movement toward his waistband.” App. 98. While Tolan had been ordered to lie down before he started to get up, it has long been settled that merely disobeying a police command to stay put is not enough to justify deadly force absent an imminent threat of serious harm. See Garner, 471 U.S. at 3-4, 10-11. Considering the havoc Cotton wreaked at the Tolans’ home in only 32 seconds, a jury could find he was simply out of control that night and used patently excessive force.

In addition, the panel completely ignored the factual dispute over whether Cotton could have warned Tolan before shooting him. Cotton testified that he exclaimed “no” or “stop” before he fired, which is some evidence that giving a warning before shooting may have been possible. App. 104. But the Tolan family testified that Cotton did not say anything at all before he shot Tolan. App. 106. Under the Fourth Amendment, officers must give warnings before using deadly force if doing so is feasible. See Garner, 471 U.S. at 11-12. The Fifth Circuit’s failure to even consider this issue is itself grounds for reversal.

The judges dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc were therefore correct in recognizing that “[i]f the panel opinion had applied the Saucier prongs correctly it would have concluded that the facts that the plaintiffs have shown make out a violation of their constitutional right to be free from excessive and deadly force by a police officer,” precluding summary judgment. App. 99. There is also no serious disagreement that Fourth Amendment law in this area is clearly established. Id. (noting that Tolan’s rights were clearly established). Given the holdings in decisions like Garner and Brosseau, as well as relevant Fifth Circuit authority,<sup>2</sup> Cotton could not reasonably have thought shooting someone who does not appear to pose a grave and imminent threat in this sort of common encounter with a suspect comports with the Fourth Amendment. Consequently, reaching the legal issues raised by this petition would not be “an essentially academic exercise,” but would change the outcome of the case. Pearson, 555 U.S. at 237.

CONCLUSION

The Court should grant the petition for writ of certiorari.

---

<sup>2</sup> See, e.g., Reyes v. Bridgewater, 362 Fed. Appx. 403, 408-09 (5th Cir. 2010) (finding that, as of 2006, when officer shot suspect holding knife, “[t]he cases on deadly force are clear: an officer cannot use deadly force without an immediate serious threat to himself or others. Here, the facts are unclear; was there such an immediate threat?”); Graves v. Zachary, 277 Fed. Appx. 344, 349 (5th Cir. 2008) (“It does not take a specific case for an officer to know that he cannot shoot a compliant suspect”); Baker v. Putnal, 75 F.3d 190, 198 (5th Cir. 1996) (denying summary judgment in light of factual dispute over whether suspect posed threat to officer who shot him).

Respectfully Submitted,

Martin J. Siegel

Counsel of Record

LAW OFFICES OF MARTIN J. SIEGEL, P.C.

Bank of America Center

700 Louisiana Street, Suite 2300

Houston, Texas 77002

(713) 226-8566

Martin@siegelfirm.com

George R. Gibson

NATHAN SOMMERS JACOBS

2800 Post Oak Boulevard, 61st Floor

Houston, Texas 77056

(713) 892-4843

Ggibson@nathansommers.com

Counsel for Petitioner

APPENDIX

APPENDIX

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Appendix A Opinion in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit (April 25, 2013) . . . . . App. 1

Appendix B Amended Final Summary Judgment in the United States District Court, Southern District of Texas, Houston Division (April 30, 2012) . . . . . App. 20

Appendix C (Corrected) Memorandum and Order on Jeffrey Wayne Cotton’s and John C. Edwards’s Motion for Summary Judgment in the United States District Court, Southern District of Texas, Houston Division (March 31, 2012) . . . . . App. 22

Appendix D On Petition for Rehearing En Banc in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit (August 1, 2013) . . . . . App. 91

Appendix E Transcript Excerpts

Excerpts of Direct Examination of Robbie Tolan, in the District Court of Harris County, Texas, 232nd Judicial District (May 6, 2010) . . . . . App. 100

Excerpts of Robbie Tolan Deposition
Transcript
(October 26, 2010) . . . . . App. 102

Excerpts of Jeffrey Cotton Deposition
Transcript
(November 15, 2010) . . . . . App. 104

Excerpts of Direct Examination of
Marian Tolan, in the District Court of
Harris County, Texas, 232nd Judicial
District
(May 6, 2010) . . . . . App. 105

App. 1

---

APPENDIX A

---

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 12-20296

[Filed April 25, 2013]

---

ROBERT R. TOLAN; MARIAN TOLAN,	)
	)
Plaintiffs - Appellants	)
	)
v.	)
	)
JEFFREY WAYNE COTTON,	)
	)
Defendant - Appellee	)

---

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas
USDC No. 4:09-CV-1324

Before JONES, BARKSDALE, and SOUTHWICK,
Circuit Judges.

RHESA HAWKINS BARKSDALE, Circuit Judge.

Primarily at issue in this appeal from a summary judgment is qualified immunity's being granted for a police officer's use of deadly force against a felony suspect, injuring him. This action concerns the various claims of four plaintiffs against numerous defendants; the appeal is from a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b) judgment (partial final judgment capable of immediate appeal). This appeal involves only two of the plaintiffs and one of the defendants.

App. 2

After summary judgment, based on qualified immunity, was awarded police officers Jeffrey Wayne Cotton and John C. Edwards against the four plaintiffs, the Rule 54(b) judgment was entered for the two Officers. Only Robert R. Tolan (Robbie Tolan) and his mother, Marian Tolan, appeal from that judgment, however; and they challenge only the judgment in favor of Sergeant Cotton. In doing so, they contest the underlying summary judgment, based on qualified immunity, awarded Sergeant Cotton against their excessive-force claims. Because no genuine dispute of material fact exists for whether Sergeant Cotton's directing deadly force at Robbie Tolan and non-deadly force at Marian Tolan was objectively unreasonable in the light of clearly-established law, the Rule 54(b) judgment in favor of Sergeant Cotton is AFFIRMED.

I.

For the reasons provided infra, the following facts are presented, as they must be on summary-judgment review, in the light most favorable to Robbie and Marian Tolan.

While patrolling shortly before two o'clock in the morning on 31 December 2008, in Bellaire, Texas, Officer Edwards noticed a black Nissan turn abruptly onto a residential street. Officer Edwards became suspicious immediately because 12 vehicles had been burglarized in Bellaire the previous night, and he knew the street terminated in a cul-de-sac. Surveilling the Nissan from a distance, Officer Edwards observed Robbie Tolan and Anthony Cooper park on the street in front of a house and exit the vehicle. Officer Edwards drove past the vehicle and entered its license-plate number into his mobile data terminal (MDT). Officer Edwards mistakenly keyed an incorrect character; his entry resulted in a match with a stolen vehicle of the same make and approximate year of manufacture. The MDT sent a message automatically to other police units, alerting them Officer Edwards had identified a stolen vehicle.

App. 3

Officer Edwards next approached the vehicle and, observing Robbie Tolan and Cooper carrying items from the vehicle to the house, illuminated them with his cruiser's spotlight. Officer Edwards exited his cruiser, drew his service pistol and flashlight, identified himself as a police officer, and ordered Robbie Tolan and Cooper to "come here". When Robbie Tolan and Cooper cursed Officer Edwards and refused to comply, Officer Edwards stated to them his belief the black Nissan was stolen and ordered them onto the ground.

Shortly thereafter, Robbie Tolan's parents, Bobby and Marian Tolan, exited the house through the front door. Again, Officer Edwards stated his belief that Robbie Tolan and Cooper had stolen the Nissan; Robbie Tolan and Cooper complied with Officer Edwards' ordering them onto the ground only after Marian and Bobby Tolan ordered them to do so. Bobby Tolan identified Robbie Tolan as his son, and Marian Tolan stated the Nissan belonged to them. Bobby Tolan yelled at Cooper and Robbie Tolan to stay down; and Marian Tolan walked repeatedly in front of Officer Edwards' drawn pistol, insisting no crime had been committed. Dealing with four people in a chaotic and confusing scene, Officer Edwards radioed for expedited assistance. Sergeant Cotton responded and, hearing the tension in Officer Edwards' voice, believed him to be in danger. Sergeant Cotton arrived approximately one and one-half minutes after Officer Edwards' arrival.

App. 4

Upon his arrival, Sergeant Cotton observed: Officer Edwards with pistol drawn; Bobby Tolan standing to Officer Edwards' left, next to a sport-utility vehicle parked in the Tolans' driveway, where Officer Edwards had ordered him to stand; Marian Tolan "moving around" in an agitated state in front of Officer Edwards; and Cooper lying prone. Sergeant Cotton drew his pistol and moved in to assist. Although Sergeant Cotton did not immediately observe Robbie Tolan, whose form was obscured by a planter on the front porch, Officer Edwards informed Sergeant Cotton that "the two on the ground had gotten out of a stolen vehicle". A single gas lamp in front of the house and two motion lights in the driveway illuminated the scene. In his deposition, Sergeant Cotton described the gas lamp as "decorative" and the front porch, where Robbie Tolan was lying, as "fairly dark"; in his deposition, Bobby Tolan stated the gas lamp provided enough light to identify a person in the front yard "within reason".

Robbie Tolan was lying face-down on the porch, with his head toward the front door and his arms extended. As noted, a planter on the front porch obscured Robbie Tolan's position from Sergeant Cotton's view.

App. 5

Sergeant Cotton recognized the immediate need to handcuff and search the felony suspects, but Marian Tolan's movement and demeanor frustrated the Officers' doing so; moreover, Marian Tolan continued to insist the car was not stolen, and stated they had lived in the house for 15 years. In an attempt to control the situation, Sergeant Cotton ordered Marian Tolan to move to the garage door; she refused, and became argumentative. Sergeant Cotton again requested Marian Tolan to move out of the Officers' way, and stated the situation would be worked out after they concluded their investigation. Marian Tolan's protestations continued; when Sergeant Cotton ordered her to "get against the garage", she refused, stating: "Me? Are you kidding?".

In response, Sergeant Cotton holstered his pistol, clutched Marian Tolan's arm, placed his other hand in the small of her back, and attempted to move her to the garage door. Despite her jerking her arm away and screaming "get your hands off me", Sergeant Cotton physically moved her to the garage door so a search of Robbie Tolan and Cooper could be conducted. From this angle, Sergeant Cotton then observed Robbie Tolan lying prone and facing away from Sergeant Cotton; the complaint for this action alleges the distance between Sergeant Cotton and Robbie Tolan was approximately 15 to 20 feet.

Sergeant Cotton's method of handling Marian Tolan angered Robbie Tolan; upon seeing his mother pushed into the garage door and hearing a metallic impact,

App. 6

Robbie Tolan yelled “get your fucking hands off my mom!”, pulled his outstretched arms to his torso, and began getting up and turning toward Sergeant Cotton. Fearing Robbie Tolan was reaching towards his waistband for a weapon, Sergeant Cotton drew his pistol and fired three rounds at Robbie Tolan, striking him once in the chest and causing serious internal injury. At the time, Robbie Tolan was wearing a dark zippered jacket, known as a “hoodie”, which was untucked and hung over the top of his trousers, concealing his waistband. A subsequent search revealed Robbie Tolan was unarmed. Between Sergeant Cotton’s arriving on the scene and his discharging his pistol, a mere 32 seconds elapsed.

In April 2009, Sergeant Cotton was charged in a state-court indictment with one count of aggravated assault by a public servant. A jury acquitted Sergeant Cotton in May 2010. As noted infra, excerpts from Sergeant Cotton’s criminal trial, including testimony by Sergeant Cotton, Officer Edwards, and the Tolans, are in the summary-judgment record.

In May 2009, following Sergeant Cotton’s being indicted that April, the Tolans and Cooper filed this action, inter alia, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Sergeant Cotton, Officer Edwards, and the City of Bellaire, claiming, inter alia: Sergeant Cotton and Officer Edwards violated Robbie and Marian Tolan’s right to freedom from excessive force (under Fourth Amendment, incorporated in Fourteenth); and both Officers acted in furtherance of a City of Bellaire official policy of racial profiling and discrimination. The Officers invoked qualified immunity in their answer, and, after discovery, moved for summary judgment on that basis.

App. 7

The district court, in an extremely detailed and well-reasoned opinion, granted the Officers' summary-judgment motion, based on qualified immunity; it held the Tolans and Cooper had not shown a constitutional violation, as required by the first of two prongs for qualified-immunity analysis, discussed infra. Tolan v. Cotton, 854 F.Supp. 2d 444, 478 (S.D. Tex. 2012). Finding there was "no just reason for delay", it entered final judgment for the Officers under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b).

II.

For an action involving multiple parties, a district court may enter final judgment for fewer than, inter alia, all parties if it "expressly determines that there is no just reason for delay". FED. R. CIV. P. 54(b). "If the language in the order appealed from . . . reflects the district court's unmistakable intent to enter a partial final judgment under Rule 54(b), nothing else is required to make the order appealable." Kelly v. Lee's Old Fashioned Hamburgers, Inc., 908 F.2d 1218, 1220 (5th Cir. 1990) (en banc). Re-stated, a Rule 54(b) judgment is a final decision capable of immediate appellate review pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291. Seatrains Shipbuilding Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 444 U.S. 572, 583-84 (1980); Elizondo v. Green, 671 F.3d 506, 509 (5th Cir. 2012).

App. 8

Of the four plaintiffs, only Robbie and Marian Tolan contest the summary judgment. Moreover, they only contest its being awarded Sergeant Cotton.

A summary judgment is reviewed de novo. Burge v. Parish of St. Tammany, 187 F.3d 452, 464 (5th Cir.1999). Summary judgment is proper if movant shows: no genuine dispute as to any material fact; and being entitled to judgment as a matter of law. FED. R. CIV. P. 56(a). “A dispute is genuine if the evidence is sufficient for a reasonable jury to return a verdict for the nonmoving party.” Poole v. City of Shreveport, 691 F.3d 624, 627 (5th Cir. 2012) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). “A fact issue is material if its resolution could affect the outcome of the action.” Id. (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). In that regard, all facts and inferences are construed in the light most favorable to non-movants. E.g., Cooper Tire & Rubber Co. v. Farese, 423 F.3d 446, 454 (5th Cir. 2005). But, for review of a summary judgment upholding qualified immunity, plaintiff bears the burden of showing a genuine dispute of material fact. Michalik v. Hermann, 422 F.3d 252, 262 (5th Cir. 2005) (qualified-immunity defense alters summary judgment burden of proof).

Extensive discovery has been conducted. Sergeant Cotton supported his summary-judgment motion with, inter alia: portions of his, Officer Edwards’, and Robbie, Marian, and Bobby Tolan’s depositions; and portions of Doctor William Lewinski’s and Lieutenant Albert Rodriguez’ expert-witness depositions, as well as their declarations, to which their expert reports were attached. Robbie and Marian Tolan supported their opposition to that motion with, inter alia: portions of Sergeant Cotton's and Officer Edwards' depositions and trial testimony; portions of Robbie Tolan's deposition and trial testimony, and his declaration; portions of Marian and Bobby Tolan's depositions and trial testimony; portions of Dr. Lewinski's deposition; and portions of Lt. Rodriguez' expert report and deposition.

App. 9

Qualified immunity promotes the necessary, effective, and efficient performance of governmental duties, Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 807 (1982), by shielding from suit all but the “plainly incompetent or those who knowingly violate the law”, Brumfield v. Hollins, 551 F.3d 322, 326 (5th Cir. 2008) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted); Mitchell v. Forsythe, 472 U.S. 511, 526 (1985) (qualified immunity is immunity from suit, not merely an affirmative defense to liability). As noted, after defendant properly invokes qualified immunity, plaintiff bears the burden to rebut its applicability. McClendon v. City of Columbia, 305 F.3d 314, 323 (5th Cir. 2002). To abrogate a public official's right to qualified immunity, plaintiff must show: first, the official's conduct violated a constitutional or statutory right; and second, the official's “actions [constituted] objectively unreasonable [conduct] in [the] light of clearly established law at the time of the conduct in question”. Brumfield, 551 F.3d at 326.

For an excessive-force claim, plaintiff clears the first prong of the qualified-immunity analysis at the summary-judgment stage by showing a genuine dispute of material fact for whether plaintiff sustained: “(1) an injury (2) which resulted from the use of force that was clearly excessive to the need and (3) the excessiveness of which was clearly unreasonable”.

App. 10

Rockwell v. Brown, 664 F.3d 985, 991 (5th Cir. 2011) (quoting Hill v. Carroll Cnty., 587 F.3d 230, 234 (5th Cir. 2009)).

For the second prong at the summary-judgment stage, plaintiff must similarly show a genuine dispute of material fact for two distinct, but intertwined, elements. “The second prong of the qualified immunity test is [] understood as two separate inquiries: whether the allegedly violated constitutional rights were clearly established at the time of the incident; and, if so, whether the [defendant’s conduct] was objectively unreasonable in the light of that then clearly established law.” Hare v. City of Corinth, 135 F.3d 320, 326 (5th Cir. 1998) (first emphasis in original) (second emphasis added).

In the excessive-force context at issue here, although the long-established two prongs of qualified-immunity analysis contain “objective reasonableness” elements, those prongs remain distinct and require independent inquiry. Brumfield, 551 F.3d at 326. Importantly, the sequence of analysis is immaterial, Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 236 (2009); qualified immunity may be granted without deciding the first prong if plaintiff fails to satisfy the second, Kovacik v. Villarreal, 628 F.3d 209, 213 (5th Cir. 2010). Deciding the second prong first is often advisable; for example, if, as here, a constitutional right is claimed to have been violated (first prong), “this approach [of first addressing the second prong] comports with [the] usual reluctance to decide constitutional questions unnecessarily”. Reichle v. Howards, 132 S. Ct. 2088, 2093 (2012).

A.

Contesting the summary judgment based on qualified immunity, Robbie Tolan contends a genuine dispute of material fact exists for whether Sergeant Cotton could have reasonably perceived him as a threat which justified the use of deadly force. He asserts a reasonable officer on the scene should have possessed information that Robbie Tolan was neither armed nor dangerous, thereby reducing the perceived threat level and negating any belief deadly force was necessary. Along that line, he relies on Marian and Bobby Tolan's exiting the house wearing pajamas and insisting Robbie Tolan and Cooper did not steal the vehicle. Robbie Tolan cites case law from other circuits for the proposition that this "updated information" negated any impression Sergeant Cotton may have had that deadly force could be reasonable. He disputes also Sergeant Cotton's maintaining Marian Tolan was shoved into the garage door so Sergeant Cotton could address a perceived threat; instead, Robbie Tolan contends he reacted because his mother was shoved into the garage door. Finally, asserting he never reached toward or into his waistband as claimed by Sergeant Cotton, Robbie Tolan relies on our court's unpublished opinion in Reyes v. Bridgwater, 362 F. App'x 403 (5th Cir. 2010), for the proposition that this disputed location of his hands is a genuine dispute of material fact, precluding summary judgment and, accordingly, mandating reversal.

The undisputed summary-judgment evidence, however, shows: Officer Edwards and Sergeant Cotton believed they were dealing with a felony vehicle theft; multiple burglaries of vehicles had occurred in the area the night prior; the Tolans' front porch was not well lit; Robbie Tolan, in spite of Officer Edwards' having drawn his pistol, disobeyed orders to remain prone while the Officers attempted to establish order and investigate the situation; and Robbie Tolan's moving to intervene in Sergeant Cotton's separating his mother was preceded by his shouting "get your fucking hands off my mom!".

App. 12

Viewing the summary-judgment record in the light most favorable to him, Robbie Tolan has not met his burden to show a genuine dispute of material fact, Michalik, 422 F.3d at 262, for whether Sergeant Cotton's conduct was objectively unreasonable in the light of clearly established law, Brumfield, 551 F.3d at 326. Accordingly, as discussed infra, and although based on a prong of qualified-immunity analysis different from that relied upon by the district court, Sergeant Cotton is entitled to qualified immunity; his actions being required to "be judged from the perspective of a reasonable officer on the scene" steers the analysis to that conclusion. Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 396 (1989).

1.

Exercising the above-referenced "usual reluctance to decide constitutional questions unnecessarily", Reichle, 132 S. Ct. at 2093, we do not reach whether Sergeant Cotton's shooting Robbie Tolan violated his Fourth Amendment right against excessive force (as noted, the district court relied on this first prong of qualified-immunity analysis). As discussed above, showing violation of a constitutional right does not end the inquiry when qualified immunity properly has been invoked. Sergeant Cotton is entitled, through summary judgment, to qualified immunity under the second prong of the analysis.

2.

A right is sufficiently clear, and therefore “clearly established”, when “every ‘reasonable official would have understood that what he is doing violates that right’”. Ashcroft v. al-Kidd, 131 S. Ct. 2074, 2083 (2011) (quoting Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 640 (1987)). “[E]xisting precedent must [] place[] the statutory or constitutional question beyond debate”. al-Kidd, 131 S. Ct. at 2083. This “clearly-established” standard balances the vindication of constitutional or statutory rights and the effective performance of governmental duties by ensuring officials can “reasonably . . . anticipate when their conduct may give rise to liability for damages”. Davis v. Scherer, 468 U.S. 183, 195 (1984). As discussed supra, this second-prong question of whether the law was clearly established cannot be untethered from the concomitant question of whether the challenged conduct was objectively unreasonable in the light of that clearly-established law. Poole, 691 F.3d at 630; see also Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 205 (2001), modified by Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223 (2009) (qualified immunity under the second prong may attach irrespective of constitutional violation under the first, which in the excessive-force context includes a separate objective-reasonableness inquiry).

It is undisputed that, when Sergeant Cotton shot Robbie Tolan, it was also clearly established that an officer had the right to use deadly force if that officer harbored an objective and reasonable belief that a suspect presented an “immediate threat to [his] safety”. Deville v. Marcantel, 567 F.3d 156, 167 (5th Cir. 2009); see also Ontiveros v. City of Rosenberg, 564 F.3d 379 (5th Cir. 2009); Young v. City of Killeen, 775 F.2d 1349 (5th Cir. 1985). Therefore, for Robbie Tolan to prevent Sergeant Cotton’s having qualified immunity, he must show a genuine dispute of material fact on whether “every ‘reasonable official would have understood’” Sergeant Cotton’s using deadly force was objectively unreasonable under the circumstances and clearly-established law. al-Kidd, 131 S. Ct. at 2083; Poole, 691 F.3d at 630. To be sure, it was clearly established that shooting an unarmed, non-threatening suspect is a Fourth-Amendment violation. Tennessee v. Garner, 471 U.S. 1 (1985). But, that is only half of the equation for second-prong analysis; the remainder depends upon the totality of the circumstances as viewed by a reasonable, on-the-scene officer without the benefit of retrospection. Poole, 691 F.3d at 628.

As explained above, an objectively-reasonable officer in Sergeant Cotton’s position would have had neither knowledge of, nor reason to suspect, Officer Edwards’ having mistakenly identified Robbie Tolan’s vehicle as stolen. Justified in his believing – however erroneously in hindsight – Robbie Tolan and Cooper had stolen a vehicle, an objectively-reasonable officer in Sergeant Cotton’s position could have also believed Robbie Tolan’s verbally threatening him and getting up from his prone position presented an “immediate threat to the safety of the officers”. Deville, 567 F.3d at 167. Compounding that threat were the surrounding circumstances: the late hour; recent criminal activity in the area; a dimly-lit front porch; Marian Tolan’s refusing orders to remain quiet and calm; and the Officers' being outnumbered on the scene. Robbie Tolan admitted that he drew his outstretched arms toward his chest, did a push-up maneuver, and began turning to his left to face Sergeant Cotton; under the above-described circumstances, these actions could have placed an objectively-reasonable officer in, as Sergeant Cotton testified, fear for his life. Accordingly, whether Robbie Tolan reached into or toward his waistband does not create a genuine dispute of material fact on objective reasonableness vel non.

As part of the support for his summary-judgment motion, Sergeant Cotton presented expert testimony from Dr. Lewinski and Lt. Rodriguez. In his expert report, Dr. Lewinski stated that, as a matter of science, an officer has only one-quarter of one second to recognize a threat and respond accordingly. Likewise, Lt. Rodriguez stated in his deposition that officers have but a fraction of a second to react to threats. Further, and in the light of these scientific principles, they maintained officers cannot be trained to positively identify a weapon before resorting to deadly force. Robbie Tolan provided no evidence rebutting this expert evidence; yet, even if he had, an officer's right to use deadly force when objectively reasonable under the circumstances is also clearly established and "beyond debate", al-Kidd, 131 S. Ct. at 2083 – even when, as here, hindsight proves underlying assumptions to be erroneous. E.g., Young, 775 F.2d 1349 (qualified immunity where officer fatally shot unarmed driver who reached under seat); Ontiveros, 564 F.3d 379 (same, where officer fatally shot unarmed suspect who reached into boot). In short, Sergeant Cotton's split-second decision to use deadly force does not amount to the type of “plain[] incompeten[ce]” necessary to divest him of qualified immunity. Brumfield, 551 F.3d at 326.

Along that line, Robbie Tolan had clear and obvious warning of Officer Edwards’ and Sergeant Cotton’s believing deadly force might be required under the circumstances: both made clear their belief Robbie Tolan’s vehicle was stolen; Sergeant Cotton drew his pistol upon his arriving on the scene; and Officer Edwards continually covered Robbie Tolan and Cooper with pistol drawn throughout the sequence of events. E.g., Garner, 471 U.S. at 11-12 (deadly force not unconstitutional when probable cause to believe crime involving threat of serious physical harm has been committed and, if feasible, suspect warned deadly force may be used).

Noteworthy here, Robbie Tolan’s refusing to obey a direct order to remain prone violated Texas Penal Code § 38.15 and Texas Transportation Code § 542.501 in Sergeant Cotton’s presence; those sections provide: “[a] person commits an offense” by disrupting or impeding “a peace officer . . . performing a duty or exercising authority imposed . . . by law”, § 38.15(a)(1); and “[a] person may not wilfully fail or refuse to comply with a lawful order . . . of a police officer”, § 542.501. Such refusal, under the circumstances, could have reinforced an officer’s reasonably believing Robbie Tolan to be a non-compliant and potentially threatening suspect. Robbie Tolan could have avoided injury by remaining prone as Officer Edwards, with pistol drawn, had ordered him to do. Instead, his shouting and abruptly attempting to approach Sergeant Cotton inflamed an already tense situation; in the light of his actions at the scene, a genuine dispute of material fact does not exist regarding whether Sergeant Cotton acted objectively unreasonably. E.g., Deville, 567 F.3d at 167; Ontiveros, 564 F.3d 379; Young, 775 F.2d 1349.

App. 17

It goes without saying that this occurrence was tragic. But, the Officers' mistake of fact and Robbie Tolan's injury do not permit deviating from controlling law. Accordingly, and because Robbie Tolan has not shown a genuine dispute of material fact for whether Sergeant Cotton's shooting him was objectively unreasonable under clearly-established law, summary judgment based on qualified immunity was proper.

B.

Marian Tolan contends the summary judgment for Sergeant Cotton was improper because a genuine dispute of material fact exists for whether her right to freedom from excessive force was violated by Sergeant Cotton's grabbing her arm and shoving her against the garage door. Viewing the summary judgment record in the light most favorable to her, Marian Tolan has not created a genuine issue of material fact on whether Sergeant Cotton's conduct was objectively unreasonable in the light of clearly-established law.

1.

For the reasons stated above, and because the undisputed, material facts show Sergeant Cotton is entitled to qualified immunity under the second prong of the qualified-immunity analysis, we need not decide the first prong.

2.

Officers have a clearly-established right to use “measured and ascending” responses to control volatile situations while in the discharge of their official duties. Poole, 691 F.3d at 629 (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). Marian Tolan likewise violated Texas Penal Code § 38.15 and Texas Transportation Code § 542.501 by refusing to remain calm and move to the garage door as Sergeant Cotton ordered, thereby, as provided in § 38.15, impeding his performing a duty imposed by law and, as provided in § 542.501, “refus[ing] to comply with [his] lawful order”.

There is no genuine dispute of material fact that this is what happened. Sergeant Cotton first used voice commands in an attempt to gain Marian Tolan’s compliance and to facilitate his securing and searching two felony suspects. E.g., Deville, 567 F.3d at 167-68 (officers should attempt voice commands before resorting to physical force when circumstances permit). Those commands having proved ineffectual, Sergeant Cotton used minimal physical force to move Marian Tolan away from Officer Edwards’ line of sight in an attempt to restore order to a chaotic and confusing scene and to conduct the necessary investigation.

Accordingly, Sergeant Cotton’s actions were not objectively unreasonable in the light of clearly-established law. Summary judgment based on qualified immunity was proper regarding Marian Tolan.

App. 19

III.

For the foregoing reasons, the Rule 54(b) judgment in favor of Sergeant Cotton is AFFIRMED.

---

APPENDIX B

---

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
HOUSTON DIVISION

CIVIL ACTION NO. H-09-1324

[Filed April 30, 2012]

---

ROBERT R TOLAN, MARIAN TOLAN, )
BOBBY TOLAN, and ANTHONY COOPER )
 )
Plaintiffs, )
 )
VS. )
 )
JEFFREY WAYNE COTTON, JOHN C. )
EDWARDS, and THE CITY OF BELLAIRE, )
TEXAS. )
 )
Defendants. )

---

AMENDED FINAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Summary Judgment having been granted in the Court's (Corrected) Opinion and Order of the 31st day of March, 2012, it is hereby ORDERED that Plaintiffs Robert R. Tolan, Marian Tolan, Bobby Tolan, and

App. 21

Anthony Cooper take nothing of Defendants Jeffrey Wayne Cotton and John C. Edwards and shall pay the costs of action.

It is further ORDERED that pursuant to Rule 54(b), the Court expressly determines that there is no just reason for delay, and directs entry of a FINAL JUDGMENT as to all claims of Robert R. Tolan, Marian Tolan, Bobby Tolan, and Anthony Cooper against Jeffrey Wayne Cotton and John C. Edwards.

SIGNED at Houston, Texas, this 30th day of April, 2012.

/s/ Melinda Harmon
MELINDA HARMON
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

APPENDIX C

---

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
HOUSTON DIVISION

CIVIL ACTION NO. H-09-1324

[Filed March 31, 2012]

---

ROBERT R TOLAN, MARIAN TOLAN, ) BOBBY TOLAN, AND ANTHONY COOPER )
 )
Plaintiffs, )
 )
VS. )
 )
JEFFREY WAYNE COTTON, JOHN C. ) EDWARDS, AND THE CITY OF BELLAIRE )
 )
Defendants. )

---

(CORRECTED) MEMORANDUM AND ORDER ON JEFFREY WAYNE COTTON'S
AND JOHN C. EDWARDS'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Pending before the Court is the motion filed by Defendants Jeffrey Wayne Cotton ("Sergeant Cotton") and John C. Edwards ("Officer Edwards") for summary judgment on their defense of qualified immunity. (Doc.

67) Plaintiffs have filed a response to the motion (Doc. 70), to which Defendants filed a reply (Doc. 72). Plaintiffs then filed a surreply (Doc. 75), to which Defendants responded (Doc. 77). These filings and the accompanying exhibits have been reviewed and considered by the Court<sup>1</sup>

Each of the Plaintiffs: Robert R. Tolan (“Robbie Tolan”), Marian Tolan, Bobby Tolan, and Anthony Cooper has filed suit pursuant to 42 U.S.C. Sec. 1983 against each of the remaining Defendants, Cotton, Edwards, and the City of Bellaire for violation of their Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights.<sup>2</sup>

Undisputed Facts.

There is no dispute that just before 2:00 a.m. on December 31, 2008, outside a home located at 804 Woodstock Street, in Bellaire, Texas, Plaintiff Robert R. (“Robbie”) Tolan was tragically shot by Bellaire Police Sergeant Jeffrey Wayne Cotton. There were six people who witnessed this shooting: Robbie Tolan and Sgt. Cotton; Robbie Tolan’s parents, Marian and Bobby <sup>1</sup> Defendants objected to certain exhibits submitted by Plaintiffs (Doc. 72). This motion is considered and ruled upon in a separate order.

---

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs originally brought a number of Texas state law claims against the defendants. On stipulation of the parties, these state law claims against the individual defendants were dismissed on January 4, 2011 (Doc. 69). On June 6, 2009 on stipulation of dismissal without prejudice filed by Plaintiffs, all defendants, except Cotton, Edwards, and the City of Bellaire, were dismissed without prejudice. (Doc. 25).

Tolan; Robbie Tolan's cousin, Anthony Cooper; and Bellaire Police Officer John C. Edwards. The question before the Court is whether the two police defendants, Sergeant Cotton and Officer Edwards may utilize the defense of qualified immunity from the lawsuit filed against them by Plaintiffs Robbie, Marian, and Bobby Tolan and Anthony Cooper.

In their opening brief Defendants summarize the evidence of what led up to the shooting. (Doc 67, at 2-8) The summary is undisputed by Plaintiffs and is taken largely from the deposition testimony of Sergeant Cotton and Officer Edwards and the four Plaintiffs. (Doc 67, Exhibits 2, 4, 15, 16, 17, 18). Briefly, the circumstances were that Officer Edwards was, at around 1:50 a.m. on December 31, 2008, on duty as a City of Bellaire police officer, patrolling in the area of the 5800 block of Bissonnet Street. He was aware that thieves had burglarized twelve vehicles in Bellaire the night before and that street gang graffiti had been placed on the buildings of the Bellaire shopping center located in the vicinity of his patrol. He was driving a marked City of Bellaire police car. The police car prominently displayed reflective tape and was equipped with a spotlight, overhead emergency lights, and a video recording system. The police car was also equipped with a computer and a Mobile Data Terminal (MAD).

While patrolling the vicinity Officer Edwards exited the shopping center parking lot on Evergreen Street and travelled eastbound. He observed a black Nissan Sports Utility Vehicle (SUV) travelling in front of him on Evergreen Street. The SUV made an abrupt turn onto Woodstock Street. The manner of the turn suggested to Officer Edwards, among other possibilities, that either the driver was unfamiliar with the neighborhood, the driver did not want to be followed by a police car, the driver was a poor driver, the driver had been distracted, or the driver's ability to operate the vehicle was in some way impaired. Officer Edwards did not follow the SUV, but stopped his police car at the intersection of Woodstock and Evergreen and continued to observe the SUV. Officer Edwards knew that Woodstock ended in a cul-de-sac, and that if the driver wanted to exit Woodstock, the driver would need to return to Evergreen. Officer Edwards observed the male driver park the SUV on the west side of Woodstock and exit the SUV, along with his male passenger. Officer Edwards did not recognize the two men, but later learned that the driver was Robert "Robbie" Ryan Tolan ("Robbie Tolan") and the passenger, Anthony Cooper ("Cooper"). Robbie Tolan testified in his deposition that as he opened the door of the SUV, he saw headlights reflecting on the door. Robbie Tolan pointed out the headlights of the police car to Cooper, but Cooper had misplaced his wallet in the SUV and was too busy looking for it. (Doc. 67, Ex. 15, p. 28, line 25--p. 29, line 3; p. 30, line 25—p. 31, line 15; Ex. 16, p. 40, lines 1-9; Plaintiffs' Complaint, at paragraph 25). Officer Edwards also noted at that time that Robbie Tolan and Cooper looked in the direction of the police car when they exited the SUV. He also observed Robbie Tolan and Cooper remove items from inside the SUV.

App. 25

Still observing the actions of Robbie Tolan and Cooper, Officer Edwards began to drive slowly past the SUV, noting as he drove, the license plate number. He typed what he believed to be the license plate number of the SUV into the Mobile Data Terminal (MDT), his police car computer, in order to run a routine check on the SUV. Unfortunately when he entered the license plate number into the MDT he made a mistake. The actual number of the SUV was 696BGK, but Officer Edwards typed in 695BGK. The computer in the police car sounded an audible alert tone indicating that the license plate number that had been typed into the MDT matched that of a vehicle that was reported stolen and also audibly and visually announced that the vehicle with the license plate number he typed in was a Black Nissan that had been reported stolen. The MDT also automatically alerted the Bellaire Police Department dispatcher, who informed Officer Edwards the vehicle had been reported stolen. Officer Edwards told the police dispatcher the location of the SUV and that two males had occupied the vehicle.

Officer Edwards recognized at this point that he was involved in investigating a reported felony crime, that the two men who had occupied the supposed stolen vehicle were aware a police car was nearby, and that he was outnumbered. He called for backup from both the Bellaire Police Department and the Houston Police Department. In an attempt to maintain the status quo until backup arrived, Officer Edwards drove through the cul-de-sac turn and stopped the police car on the side of the road facing the SUV, but at a distance. Before backup arrived, however, Bobbie Tolan and Cooper approached as if to enter a residence in the neighborhood; they were carrying several items. This change in the circumstances prompted Officer Edwards to drive his police car forward and park in front of the SUV. He shined the police car spotlight to better illuminate Robbie Tolan and Cooper in the poorly lit front yard and driveway of the house. He exited the police car and removed his handgun from its holster, calling to Robbie Tolan and Cooper, "Police, Come here." Officer Edwards was wearing a regulation Bellaire Police uniform; he carried his handgun in one hand and a flashlight in the other. His intention was to detain temporarily Robbie Tolan and Cooper near the SUV in order to make a field investigation of what he believed to be an automobile theft. When Robbie Tolan and Cooper failed to come to Officer Edwards, but proceeded in an opposite direction, Officer Edwards repeatedly ordered them to stop and lie on the ground.

In paragraph 37 of the complaint (Doc 1), Plaintiffs allege that, in response to their question of why he wanted them to lie down, Officer Edwards told Robbie Tolan and Cooper that he wanted them to lie down because he had information that the SUV was stolen. Both Robbie Tolan and Cooper testified in their depositions that they did not comply with Officer Edwards' verbal requests to lie on the ground. (Doc. 67, Ex. 15, p. 40, line 22—p. 41, line 8; Ex. 16, p. 51, lines 4-7) Robbie Tolan even stepped outside of the officer's view when he put a bag he was carrying behind a sago palm tree in a planter near the door of the house.

While Officer Edwards was ordering Robbie Tolan and Cooper to the ground, two people came from inside the house onto the front porch. Although Officer Edwards did not know it at the time, they were Robbie Tolan's parents, Robert ("Bobby") Tolan and his wife Marian Tolan. Bobby Tolan testified in his deposition that he told Robbie Tolan and Cooper to "shut the fuck up, be quiet, and get on the ground" (Doc. 67, Ex. 18, p. 48, lines 15-19). After his father told him this, Robbie Tolan lay down on the porch of the house, with his head in the direction of the door and his feet toward the driveway. Cooper knelt down on the ground, nearer to Officer Edwards. While Bobby Tolan was talking to Officer Edwards, Marian Tolan walked about the front yard shouting. Officer Edwards had four people to watch, and he still had not investigated the automobile theft, so he called the dispatcher again to ask backup to hurry to the scene.

App. 28

While all of this was transpiring at 804 Woodstock Drive, Sergeant Cotton was at the Bellaire Police Station doing paperwork. He heard radio transmissions that Officer Edwards had encountered a reportedly stolen vehicle along with two individuals who had occupied that vehicle. Sergeant Cotton responded in his police car. He first instructed Bellaire Police Corporal Chris Delk (Delk) to go to Braeburn Street, south of Woodstock Street, in case there was a foot pursuit. Sergeant Cotton then drove to 804 Woodstock Street. As he approached the Woodstock address Sergeant Cotton heard on the police car radio Officer Edwards's second, more urgent, call for backup. Sergeant Cotton arrived at 804 Woodstock at 1:53 a.m., some one and one-half minutes after Officer Edwards exited his police car. It is undisputed that at the time of Sergeant Cotton's arrival Robbie Tolan was lying prone on the porch, Cooper was on the ground, not necessarily prone, Bobby Tolan was standing next to his Explorer that was parked in the driveway, close to Officer Edwards, and Marian Tolan was moving around the front yard.

Disputed Facts

The facts set forth above are not disputed. At 1:53 a.m., however, some of the facts become disputed. The Plaintiffs rely upon these disputed facts to argue that a summary judgment of qualified immunity is inappropriate in this case. Sergeant Edwards and Officer Cotton, however, argue that although there may be details that are in dispute, the material facts that establish the defense of qualified immunity are not in dispute. There were six witnesses to what transpired that early morning of the shooting. Each of these witnesses has been deposed about the shooting. A review of the depositions in some detail reveal that, although there are disputes about details and interpretations of the facts, there are no disputes of material fact.

Robbie Tolan's Deposition Testimony

Robbie Tolan testified that when Sergeant Cotton arrived on the scene he did not see him because he was lying face down on the porch of the house. Doc. 67, Ex. 15, p. 63, line 19—p 64, line 1. Although he could not see Anthony Cooper, he had a general idea of where he was. Id. p. 64, lines 7-24. Before he lay down on the porch he had seen his mother, Marian Tolan, “in the vicinity of Mr. Cooper.” Id. p 71, lines 1-23. He also testified that, although he did not know it at the time, he knew at the time he gave his deposition that his mother was taking a Blackberry from Anthony Cooper when she went over to him as he lay on the ground. Id. p 72, lines 2-20.

Robbie Tolan testified that the first time he saw the man he now knows to be Sergeant Cotton he saw him walking down the driveway. Robbie Tolan was at that point lying on his stomach on the porch, with his head turned to his left. Id. p. 75, line 10—p. 76, line 8. He next saw Sergeant Cotton in the area of Cooper, where he saw Sergeant Cotton “grab my mother.” Id. p.76, lines 14-25. He did not hear Sergeant Cotton say anything to his mother, but he heard his mother talking. He did not “remember exactly what she said.” Id. p 77, lines 1-9. When asked if he recalled “generally” what she said, he responded that “I know she kept saying that this is our house and we live here, and things of that nature.” Id. p. 77, lines10-13. Between the time Robbie Tolan lay down on the porch until Sergeant. Cotton fired his weapon, he remembered his mother saying only things in the nature of “this is our house, that car is not stolen.” Id. p 78, lines 12-21.

Robbie Tolan further testified that when Sergeant Cotton grabbed his mother, Sergeant Cotton grabbed her arm, although Robbie Tolan did not recall which arm. Id. p. 79, lines 107. Robbie Tolan observed Sergeant Cotton then move parallel to the front of the house and then toward the garage door. Id. p.79, lines 11-21. While Sergeant Cotton was moving from the area where Cooper was located to the garage door area, Sergeant Cotton was holding Marian Tolan’s arm, “kind of pushing her a little bit, kind of directing her.” He further testified that “There was no tussle. I mean, but she – she wasn’t exactly running over there either.” Id. p 80, lines 3-24. While Sergeant Cotton and Marian Tolan were walking between Cooper and the garage door Robbie Tolan’s mother made no noises or sounds, but kept repeating “this is a mistake. . . we live here and things of that nature.” Id. p. 81, 3-7. When Sergeant Cotton and Marian Tolan arrived in front of the garage door, they were “pretty much directly behind [Robbie Tolan].” Id. p. 83, lines 21-15. Robbie Tolan had continued to turn his head to the left and look backwards to follow what was going on between Sergeant Cotton and Marian Tolan. He had a good view of them. He “saw and heard Sergeant Cotton push my mom against the garage door. . . . And it made a loud noise.” Id. p. 84, lines 1-25.

App. 31

The sight and sound of his mother being pushed against a metal garage door “caused [him] to want to get up from the position that [he was] laying in . . . . because [he was] upset about seeing [his] mother being pushed into a garage door.” Id. p. 85, lines 1-19. At that point in Robbie Tolan’s deposition, there were the following questions and answers:

Question: “[A]m I correct in saying that not only did you want to get up from the position of ‘RT’ [the position in which he was lying on his stomach on the porch], but you wanted to turned [sic] around to where your mother and Sergeant Cotton were?”

Answer: “That I wanted to, yes, sir.”

Question: “In fact, that’s what you were doing at the time you were shot, right?”

Answer: “True.”

App. 32

Question: “You were getting up and turning around toward your mother and Sergeant Cotton?”

Answer: “True.”

Id., p 85, line 20—p. 85, line 8

Robbie Tolan testified that while he was lying prone on the porch he had his arms out in front of him. In order to get up he had “to pull [his] arms back towards kind of [his] chest area and push up. . . .” He “used kind of like a push up maneuver to get [himself] up.” Id. p 100, lines 13-24. He was “turning, ...pushing up with [his] hands, and turning towards [his] left.” Id. p. 101, lines 6-8. At the time he was not thinking about the mechanics of getting up:

Question: [Y]ou’ve been asked to talk about kind of the mechanics of getting up that night. Right?

Answer: Yes.

Question: Just like we’re doing here, we’re talking about pulling your hands back, push up with both hands, and at the same time that you’re turning around, right?

Answer: Yes, sir.

Question: Okay. But, would it be right for me to say, Mr. Tolan, that at the time that you were getting up that morning, would it be right for me to say you really weren't thinking about how you were doing it, right?

App. 33

Answer: Sure.

Question: In other words, people have asked you, how were you doing it, and you have tried to kind of recreate it in your mind and describe it, right?

Answer: Yes, sir.

Question: But in terms of each thing that you were doing at the moment you were doing it, would it be right for me to say it's not something you were thinking about at the moment that you were doing it?

Answer: Sure

Question: So when you give us a recreation of it, it is your best guess of how you were doing it, right?

Answer: Sure.

Id., page101, line 10 -- page 102, line 10

Later in his deposition Robbie Tolan described further the circumstances of his being shot:

Question: Now, so as you're getting up and I think you told me you're turning to your left as you're getting up?

App. 34

Answer: Yes, sir.

Question: Okay. And is Sergeant Cotton -- as you're turning towards Sergeant Cotton, and getting up, is Sergeant Cotton still holding your mother by the arm?

Answer: To my knowledge, yes.

Question: Okay. And as you're getting up and turning to your left -- by the way, did you get up quickly or slowly?

Answer: Pretty quickly, I suppose.

Question: All right. And as you're getting up, did you scream or raise your voice and say, "Get your fucking hands off my mom?"

Answer: Yes, sir.

Question: You were angry by then, right?

Answer: Yes, sir.

Question: And, so, if somebody said they saw an angry look on your face, you would say, well, that would probably be right, right?

Answer: Sure.

Question: And you would agree with me, wouldn't you, that saying something like "get your fucking hands off my mom" is an aggressive statement? You would agree with that, wouldn't you?

App. 35

Id., page 105, line 9 -- page 106, line 10

Question: And in turning, are you -- were you able to see Sergeant Cotton's face as you are turning towards him?

Answer: Yes, sir.

Id., page 106, lines 19-22

Question: Did you see Sergeant Cotton actually unholster his weapon?

Answer: Yes, sir.

Question: And would it be right for me to say that you did not see Sergeant Cotton unholster his weapon until you were beginning to get up and turning [sic] toward him?

Answer: Yes, sir.

Question: In other words, from what you observed, Sergeant Cotton's weapon was holstered up until the time that you hollered to him and began getting up and turning toward him

Answer: Sure.

Question: And then he unholsters his weapon, right?

App. 36

Answer: Yes, sir.

Question: Points it at you, and at the same time, practically immediately, is shooting, right?

Answer: Yes, sir.

Id., page 107, lines 6-22.

Bobbie Tolan agreed that “the first thing that Sergeant Cotton did after he fired his weapon was to come over to you and check you for weapons. . . . And when he didn’t find a weapon, he specifically said to you, what were you reaching for, right?” Id., page 114, lines 8-15

Deposition Testimony of Anthony Cooper

Anthony Cooper testified that he saw Sergeant Cotton arrive. “He came from the street, and he was on the side of the Suburban [the Tolans’ automobile parked in the driveway]. Doc. 67, Exhibit 16, p. 74, lines 18-24. About the same time Sergeant Cotton arrived, Cooper went from his knees to lying on the ground. At some point, either when Cooper was on his knees or lying on the ground, Marian Tolan came over and picked up his Blackberry from the ground. Id. 75, line 4—p 76, line 24.

Cooper was asked in his deposition whether from the time he and Robbie Tolan first communicated with Officer Edwards, through the time Mr. and Mrs. Tolan came out of the house, to Robbie Tolan’s shooting, “was there ever a time that none of you were talking, that you weren’t talking, that Robby wasn’t talking, that Marian Tolan wasn't talking, and Bobby Tolan wasn't talking, or was somebody from the Tolan family? Or are you always talking during that time?" Cooper answered, "I mean somebody was--every--there were people--everybody was talking." Id., page 141, lines 8-22. He was further asked, "[W]as there ever a time it was quiet--from the time that Officer Edwards approached you up until the time that Sergeant Cotton shot, was there ever a time that some Tolan or Mr. Cooper was not talking?" Cooper answered, "No." Id., page 142, lines 3-8.

App. 37

Cooper described the contact Sgt. Cotton made with Marian Tolan:

Question: "Okay. So, did you see Sergeant Cotton ever touch Mrs. Tolan?"

Answer: "Yes."

Question: "Okay. And where was Sergeant Cotton when he touched Mrs. Tolan the first time you saw it?"

Answer: "The Suburban was here."

Question: "Okay."

Answer: "And Bobby was on the Suburban. Marian was --"

Question: "Put a 'B' for Bobby for--will you, please?"

Answer: "Bobby was on the Suburban."

Question: “Uh-huh.”

Answer: “Marian was right where the front porch—she was started from the front porch—“

Question: “Uh-huh”

Answer: “-- and she worked her way through the sidewalk right here where—where I was laying at. This is the sidewalk right here.”

Question: “Yes sir.”

Answer: “And she grabbed the phone.”

Question: “Uh-huh”

Answer: “And I believe when she grabbed the phone, Sergeant Cotton and – Sergeant Cotton was there, and he told her, or grabbed her, and--”

Question: “All right. You’re imparting by C3, is that where you saw Sergeant Cotton touch Mrs. Tolan or was it somewhere else?”

Answer: “That’s where he grabbed her.”

Id. p. 76, line 11—p. 77, line12.

When asked if he saw Sgt. Cotton push Marian Tolan into the garage door, Anthony Cooper responded, “I saw him grab her arm. . .and shoved her against the garage door.” He heard her hit the garage door with “a big bang and she slid down on her butt.” Id. p. 77, lines 17-24.

App. 39

Cooper testified that he heard the shots, “maybe a second after she hit the garage door.” Id. p. 78, lines 8-11. He remembered that Sergeant Cotton’s weapon was out of the holster when he grabbed Marian Tolan. Id. p. 81, lines 1-24. He later remembered, within the next few pages of the deposition that from the time Marian Tolan hit the garage door and hit the ground until he observed Sergeant Cotton fire his weapon, “It was within seconds.” Id. p. 82, lines 20-23. When asked what would be the most seconds he would say it was, he replied, “Maybe five seconds.” Id. p. 83, lines 5-8. He also testified that he did not remember and knew nothing about Robbie Tolan getting up or trying to get up off the ground. Id. p. 87, lines 1-23. He agreed, however, that as Robbie Tolan lay on the porch, his head was facing away from where his mother had been pushed into the garage door, so that in order to see the garage door Robbie Tolan would have to turn around. Id. p. 88, line 14—p. 89, line 7. Cooper agreed that Sergeant Cotton was standing “in the same position or right—right about the same position where he pushed Mrs. Tolan into the garage door, when he fired his weapon,” and that Sergeant Cotton did not move toward Robbie Tolan before he fired. Id. p. 111, lines 3-13. Cooper also agreed that up until Sergeant Cotton fired his weapon he never saw Sergeant Cotton off the driveway anywhere. Id. p. 134, lines 3-7.

Marian Tolan's Deposition Testimony

Marian Tolan testified at her deposition that when she and her husband exited the front door of their house at 804 Woodstock, their son Robbie Tolan was in the process of unlocking that front door. Doc. 67, Exhibit 17, p. 44, line 24—p 45, line 25. Once they walked outside the front door she could see Cooper and Officer Edwards, as well as their son Robbie Tolan. Id. p. 47, lines 1-4. She did not believe at that time Sergeant Cotton had arrived at the house. Id. p. 47, lines 12-18. There were no police officers there, except Officer Edwards. Id. p. 47, lines 23-25. When Marian Tolan and her husband came out of the house Officer Edwards was saying to Anthony Cooper and Robbie Tolan, “Get Down.” Id. p 48, line 23—p. 49, line 3. She and her husband also told Cooper and Robbie Tolan to get down. Id. p. 49, lines 14-20. After the Tolans told Anthony Cooper and Robbie Tolan to get down, perhaps twice, they complied. Id. p. 50, lines 6-9.

Marian Tolan testified that when Sergeant Cotton arrived she could not see him, so she was unable to say if he had his gun drawn and if he placed his gun back into his holster before withdrawing it again to shoot. She only knew that he replaced the gun in the holster after the shooting. Id. p. 66, line 18--p. 67, line 12.

Marian Tolan was asked, “Robb[ie] had gotten up from lying down on the ground, as you and your husband had instructed him to do, without anybody giving him permission to do it or telling him it was okay to do it, when Sergeant Cotton shot him, right?” She answered, “Yes.” Id. p. 92, lines 8-13. Then, she was asked, “He was going from laying on the ground to not laying on the ground?” She answered, “Yes.” Then she was asked, “He was in the process of getting up when he got shot, wasn’t he?” She answered “Yes.” Id. p. 92, line 25—p. 93, line 5. Later in the deposition she was asked, “At the time that Sergeant Cotton fired at Robb[ie] as Robb[ie] was getting off the ground, had anyone checked yet to see whether Mr. Cooper or Robb[ie] Tolan had a weapon?” She answered, “No.” The next question posed to her was, “Whether either of those gentlemen had a weapon at the time that Sergeant Cotton responded to Robb[ie] getting up off the ground, can we agree was uncertain?” She answered, “It was uncertain.” Id. p. 116, lines 3-12.

Marian Tolan characterized being pushed against the garage door as an assault. When asked what she was doing when she was assaulted by Sergeant Cotton, she answered, “Talking.” Id. p. 117, lines 19-24. She was then asked what Sergeant Cotton was asking her to do, and she responded that he said “Get against the garage—get against the wall,” which she did not do. Id. p. 117, line 25-p. 118, line 8. She testified that “I could not believe he was asking me to do that. That is why I responded the way that I did.” Id. p. 118, lines 20-21. She told Sergeant. Cotton, “Me? Are you kidding me? We’ve lived here 15 years. We’ve never had anything like this happen.” Id. p. 118, lines 23-25.

Marian Tolan further testified that after Sergeant Cotton “threw” her into the garage door, Robbie Tolan started to get up from the ground. He told Sergeant Cotton “to get his hands off of his mom.” Id. p 174, lines 15-25. She was then asked if he did not actually say, “Get your fucking hands off my mom,” and she answered, “I don’t recall him using that word, but he says he did.” Id. p. 175, lines 1-4. She agreed that it was at that point that Sergeant Cotton shot Robbie Tolan. Id. p. 175, lines 5-7. She was asked if Sergeant Cotton withdrew his weapon from its holster before firing. She responded, “I didn’t see it until then.” Id. p. 175, lines 8-14. The three gunshots came immediately after each other, with no delay, and it sounded like one gunshot to her. Id. p. 175, line 21—p. 176, line 7. After the shooting, Sergeant Cotton called paramedics first and then asked Marian Tolan, “Is there anyone else in the house?” When Marian Tolan said, “No,” Sergeant Cotton went over to Robbie, “Turned him over and emptied his pockets and said, ‘What were you reaching for?’” Robbie responded, “Nothing.” Id. p. 176, lines 12-25. From the moment Sergeant Cotton arrived at 804 Woodstock until the time he fired his weapon, Marian Tolan agreed, took 32 seconds. Id. p. 178, lines 6-8.

Deposition Testimony of Robert, “Bobby,” Tolan

Robbie Tolan’s father, Bobby Tolan testified in his deposition that although he did not know it at the time, he has since learned that when Officer Edwards got out of his police car and followed Robbie Tolan and Anthony Cooper toward the house at 804 Woodstock Street, Officer Edwards had heard a report that the automobile whose license plate he had entered into his police car computer was stolen. Doc. 67, Ex. 18, p. 29, lines 17-25. He agreed that as he exited his house and walked to Officer Edwards he told Robbie Tolan and Anthony Cooper to get on the ground and shut up; this took only a few seconds. Id. p. 48, lines 18-19; p. 54, lines 1-8. He also agreed that he then went from being in front of Officer Edwards to putting his hands on the Suburban in the driveway because Officer Edwards asked him to put his hands on the Suburban; from the time he walked out his front door until he was standing by the Suburban took a few seconds. Id. p. 54, line 19—p. 55, line 20. Bobby Tolan testified that he never saw Sergeant Cotton in his front yard the night of the shooting. He did not see anything Sergeant Cotton did, nor did he see any interaction between his wife and Sergeant Cotton. He did hear a bang against the garage door. Id., p. 60, lines 3-25. Immediately after hearing the sound of something going against the garage door, he heard the gunshot. When he turned to look he saw his wife with her back to the garage door, sliding down the door. Id. p 62, line 24-p. 63, line 8. Immediately after that he was told to go over to the police car. Id. p. 64, line 16-p. 65, line 3. While Bobby Tolan was standing next to the Suburban he was unable to see his son Robbie Tolan at any time. Id. p. 65, lines 4-6. Bobby Tolan did not hear his son Robbie say, “Get your fucking hands off my mother” before the shot was fired. Id. p. 85, lines 10-13. Bobby Tolan agreed that there was “basically a lot of loud commotion in [his] front yard between when [he] first came out and when the gunshot occurred. Id. p. 85, line 25—p. 86, line 4. He was asked “Have you seen anything or heard anything that leads you to believe that Officer Edwards knew of the race of either of the occupants in the vehicle?” Bobby Tolan answered, “I have no idea.” Id. p. 91, lines 22-25. He also agreed that he had “no facts” that lead him to believe that the race of anybody involved had anything to do with shooting, but he has his opinion. Id. p. 92, lines 3-19. Bobby Tolan explicitly testified that neither Officer Edwards, nor Sergeant Cotton, used any force against him at all.

Id., p. 54, line 24 -- page 55, line 25; page 56, lines 4-12; page 60, lines 3-9. His wife, Marian Tolan, agreed. Doc. 67, Exhibit 17, page 163, lines 12-16.

Deposition Testimony of Sergeant Jeffrey Wayne Cotton

Sergeant Cotton admitted in his deposition that he shot Robbie Tolan. Doc. 67, Ex. 2, p 8, lines 11-15. The night Robbie Tolan was shot Sergeant Cotton was the shift supervisor at the Bellaire Police Department; in other words he was in charge of the patrol officers and the dispatchers for the eight hour shift. Id. p. 14, lines 1-13. As the shift supervisor Sergeant Cotton was Officer Edward's supervisor. Id., lines 14-17. The shift began at 10:30 p.m. Id., p. 15, lines 7-10.

A little before two a.m., while he was working on entering data for an accident report, Sergeant Cotton heard Officer Edwards call in a suspicious car with two men in it. Id. p. 27, line 16 – p. 28, line 24. Sergeant Cotton testified that he decided to go to the scene to back up Officer Edwards. Id. p. 35, line 2-6. Just as he was leaving the police station he heard the information that the vehicle is stolen. Id. p. 37, lines 10-14. He drove to the scene without using the siren or flashing lights on the police car. Id. p. 36, lines 1-5. As he approached the scene Sergeant Cotton heard Officer Edwards advise on his radio that the suspects were moving, and “that he was going to have to take them, meaning he was going to have to—to address the suspects right now before backup was going to be able to get there.” Id. p. 37, line 24—p. 38, line 5. After that transmission Officer Edwards transmitted a message that back up needed to hurry. Id. p. 41, lines 14-20. Sergeant Cotton noticed some tension in Officer Edwards's voice, and

App. 45

Sergeant Cotton “perceived [Officer Edwards] was in a dangerous situation.” Id. p. 42, lines 6-12.

When Sergeant Cotton arrived at the scene, 804 Woodstock, he did not know the race of the suspects. Id., p. 34, lines 16-19. He also did not know the race of the Tolans or Anthony Cooper. Id., p. 42, line 23—p. 43, line 1.

As soon as Sergeant Cotton parked his police car he got out of it very quickly. Id., p. 43, lines 22-25. He saw Officer Edwards standing in the front yard with a drawn gun. He saw Bobby Tolan standing to his left in the yard and Marian Tolan “moving around the front yard.” He saw “at least” Anthony Cooper lying on the sidewalk. He did not at first see Robbie Tolan. Id., p. 44, lines 1-10. Sergeant Cotton testified that Marian Tolan “was in dynamic movement, so I don’t remember the –specific spot that she was in. She was moving around from Officer Edwards’ left to in front of him to his right, kind of all in that area in front of him.” Officer Edwards had drawn his weapon. Id. p. 44, line 25—p. 45, line 6. It was a hand gun that he was pointing in the direction of Cooper and Robbie Tolan. Id. p. 45 line 12—p. 46, line 1.

Sergeant Cooper testified that he also drew his hand gun and moved over to Officer Edwards, touching him on the shoulder with his shoulder. He asked him something like, “What have you got?” Officer Edwards responded that “the two on the ground had gotten out of the stolen vehicle.” He could by then see at least part of Robbie Tolan’s hands or head sticking out past the planter on the porch. Id. p.46, line 10- 19. Cooper was on the ground, but Sergeant Cotton could not remember if he was then on his stomach or on his back. Both suspects appeared to him to be complying, “for the moment” with Officer Edwards directives. Id. p. 46, line 20—p. 47, line 3.

App. 46

Sergeant Cotton testified that the next thing he believed he needed to do was search and handcuff the suspects, but Marion Tolan was still in front of Officer Edward’s pointed gun, “so I needed to get her controlled before I could move into the suspects.” Although Marian Tolan was “putting herself between [Officer Edward’s] weapon and Anthony Cooper and Robbie Tolan,” Sergeant Cotton did not interpret her actions as trying to block a shot from Officer Edward’s gun. Rather, “she was just moving around kind of not really paying attention to the gun, just very agitated and – and upset and moving kind of all over the scene.” Id. p. 47, lines 5-19. She was also talking as she moved. Sergeant Cooper paraphrased that what she was saying was “What are you doing here, we live here, you shouldn’t be here, those kinds of things.” Id. p. 47, line 20—p. 48, line 1. He also remembered that at some point, when he addressed Marian Tolan, that she said, “That’s our car.” Id. p. 48, lines 5-8.

Sergeant Cotton remembered that the exterior lighting consisted of a gas lamp “out front,” which shed “some, but not a lot” of light, “more decorative than—than illuminating” and two spotlights on the driveway. The area in which Cooper was situated was better lit than the porch, which was “fairly dark.” Sergeant Cotton could, however, see Robbie Tolan lying on the porch. Id. p. 49, lines 4-25. Sergeant Cotton testified that Robbie Tolan was lying “with his feet toward the driveway and his head toward the front door,” with his arms stretched out in front of him, “more like Superman” than an airplane, and his fingertips “pointing towards the front door.” Id. p. 50, lines 6-16.

Immediately after speaking to Officer Edwards, Sergeant Cotton’s attention was directed toward Marian Tolan, whose behavior “heightened [his] tension.” Id. p. 50, line 25—p. 51, line 3. “I identified her as being part of a scene that was out of control that was going to have to be controlled before we could move forward.” Id. p. 51, lines 6-9. “What needed further control was that both the felony suspects needed to be cuffed and searched,” and at that point Marian Tolan was “hindering [his] ability to cuff and search the two felony suspects.” Id. p. 51, lines 13-18. Sergeant Cotton asked Marian Tolan “several times” to move to the garage door. Her response was “noncompliant, kind of argumentative. She was upset and continuing to--to protest.” Id. p. 51, line 23—p. 52, line 2.

Sergeant Cotton testified that Marian Tolan said, “We live here, what are you doing here, you shouldn’t be here, and that that’s our car.” His only response “was to tell her to calm down, to let us do our investigation, we’ll work everything out.” She was still noncompliant. He recalled that Marian Tolan “maybe took one or two steps towards the garage door, and then stopped and began protesting again.” They were not close to the garage door, but “still on the driveway or kind of on the edge of the driveway to Officer Edwards’ right.” Id. p. 55, lines 1-20.

“As soon as [he] addressed her, [Sergeant Cotton] holstered [his] weapon and then was trying to gain her compliance. When Marian Tolan would not comply, Sergeant Cotton testified that “I grabbed her right arm, I believe with my right hand, and put my left hand at the small of her back to start escorting her over to the garage door.” Id. p. 57, lines 3-7. Marian Tolan was talking as he was escorting her, and soon after he first touched her, “she flipped her arm up trying to flip my—hand off of her and said, ‘Get your hands off of me.’” Id. p. 57, lines 19-23. She tried to flip up her right arm, and she turned over her right shoulder to say to him, “Get your hands off me.” All the while he was walking her in the direction of and getting closer to the garage door. Id. p. 58, lines 7-18.

Sergeant Cotton testified that he was gripping her arm, “not as hard as I could, but enough to—to gain control of another person.” His “intention was certainly not to cause a bruise. . . .” Id. p. 58, line 19--p. 59, line 4. He did not believe that he had caused bruises. Id. p. 59, line 8.

As he and Marian Tolan moved toward the garage door Sergeant Cotton passed the planter on the porch and got a clear view of Robbie Tolan lying on the porch. Id. p. 59, lines 16-24. Officer Edwards was still “covering” Robbie Tolan and Anthony Cooper. Id. p. 59, line 25—p. 60, line 4.

Sergeant Cotton and Marian Tolan were almost to the garage door. Sergeant Cotton glanced at Robbie Tolan on the porch and then turned his attention back to Marian Tolan when he heard Robbie Tolan yell, “Get your fucking hands off her.” When Sergeant Cotton heard Robbie Tolan make that statement he also saw Robbie Tolan getting up and turning around. In order to address Robbie Tolan and to get Marian Tolan out of the way, he pushed Marian Tolan away from him. Id. p. 60, line 11—62, line 15.

Sergeant Cotton testified that Robbie Tolan had been lying down on the porch, hands outstretched towards the front door, but when Sergeant Cotton looked again at Robbie Tolan when he said “Get your fucking hands off her,” Robbie Tolan “was already partially up.” Sergeant Cotton further testified [Robbie Tolan] wasn't still—so I did not see all of his getting up. When I looked again after hearing him, he was already getting up, probably halfway up or so, and was turning to his right rotating with his face toward the window.

Id. p. 63, lines 8-12

Sergeant Cotton further testified, “When I first looked, he was—still had his back, for the most part, to me in the process of rotating” to look at Sergeant Cotton. Id. p. 63, lines 21-25. He also testified that he did not know where Robbie Tolan was when he said the words, “Get your fucking hands off of her.” Id. p. 64, lines 1-15.

Sergeant Cotton also testified that he did not see Robbie Tolan “pull his hands back towards his midsection to push himself off of the concrete” in order to get up off the ground. Id. p. 64, lines 20-24. Rather, after hearing Robbie Tolan yell, Sergeant Cotton turned and saw Robbie Tolan “was up in a crouch kind of in the process of getting up with his feet under him facing kind of away from me while—as he was rotating to his right.” Id. p. 64, line 25—p. 65, line 5.

When asked where Robbie Tolan’s arms were, Sergeant Cotton testified that Robbie Tolan’s right hand was at his waistband and he did not know where his left hand was. By “at his waistband,” Sergeant Cotton testified that he meant “in the middle of his waist,” “in the center of his body,” “where his belt buckle would be.” Id. p. 65, lines 6-15. Sergeant Cotton testified that Robbie Tolan was wearing a dark, zippered hoodie not tucked into his pants. Id. p. 65, 16-23.

Sergeant Cotton testified that he thought Robbie Tolan was drawing a weapon from his waistband. Sergeant Cotton could not see his hand, but he could see where his hand was. It was dark, but “I could see his total movement, which is what made me believe that it wasn’t necessarily just where his hand was, for instance.” He did know that he had his hand in the vicinity of his waistband. Id. p. 67, line 4-19.

According to Sergeant Cotton, Robbie Tolan was not running toward Sergeant Cotton, but he was turning around to face Sergeant Cotton, on both feet. Id. p. 67, line 20--p.68, line 3. Sergeant Cotton testified that he thought that Robbie Tolan “was drawing a weapon to shoot me.” He was in fear of his life. It was not any one thing that made him afraid, but the “totality of everything that was happening that put me in fear, which included the way he was getting up and where his hand was and –while he was getting up” Id. p. 68, line 4—p. 69, line 2.

Deposition Testimony of Officer John C. Edwards

Officer Edwards testified that when Sergeant Cotton arrived at 804 Woodstock, Anthony Cooper was lying on the ground, “moving from side to side, fidgeting with his phone, with his head towards the street. Doc. 67, Ex. 4, p. 41, lines 20-25. Officer Edwards told Sergeant Cotton that two of the four people in the front yard came out of the house and two came out of the car. Sergeant Cotton then proceeded towards the garage door in the direction of where Marian Tolan was located. At that point Officer Edwards turned his attention to Cooper. Id. p. 44, lines 1-18. He did this because he thought Sergeant Cotton would watch the person he now knows to be Robbie Tolan, Id. p. 45, line 21—p. 46, line 2. Officer Edwards was still telling Cooper to lay still and quit “flipping and flopping around.” Bobby Tolan came up to talk to Officer Edwards, but Officer Edwards does not recall what he said. Id. p. 46, lines 5-12. Marian Tolan had gone off to the side with Sergeant Cotton. “[S]he was all over the scene basically. She would start over with Anthony, walk into the driveway, back behind Bobby, back towards the front of the house. . . . I can’t watch her moving around and – another guy laying on the ground, plus another guy that’s partially behind a bush laying on the ground.” Id. p. 46, line 19—p. 47, line 9. Officer Edwards was aware of her movements, and they made his job more difficult. When Sergeant Cotton arrived, he took Marian Tolan off in a different direction. Id. p. 47, lines 15-21.

The next thing Officer Edwards remembered happening was, from his right, the area Sergeant

Cotton and Marian Tolan were in, he heard “shouting or yelling, getting, I guess, more agitated . . . in the general direction of Robbie.” This drew his attention, but Officer Edwards did not at that point look at Marian Tolan and Sergeant Cotton. He testified he needed to focus on Cooper. Robbie Tolan was also his responsibility, but he could not see Robbie Tolan, “except for his hands and part of his head,” his shoulders up, because Officer Edwards’s view was obscured by the sago palm in the planter on the porch. Id. p. 47, line 24—p. 48, line 24. After he heard the noise being made Office Edwards saw Robbie Tolan’s hands move, and then Robbie Tolan disappeared from Officer Edwards’s view. Id. p. 52, lines 3-9. He was “totally obscured” by the sago palm. Id. p. 52, lines 17-24. “Afterwards, I saw him standing up. . . . fully on his feet. . . in a crouch—as in a charging position is what I said.” Id. p. 53, lines 15-20. When asked if he saw Robbie Tolan on a knee or on his feet completely, Officer Edwards testified that he could not see his feet. Id. p. 54, lines 1-3. He also testified that he could not see if he was reaching in his waistband because the potted sago palm on the porch was obscuring his view. He could see, however, that Bobby Tolan “was in basically a hunched charging position. . . . It looked like he was going to go forward, forward motion.” Id. p. 54, lines 4-19. Officer Edwards turned to face Robbie Tolan and pointed his gun at him, but he did not fire. He then saw one flash from Sergeant Cotton’s gun, but heard two shots. Id. p. 54, lines 10-24. Robbie Tolan disappeared from his view again, behind the sago palm. Id. p. 58, lines 6-10. Officer Edwards called on his radio to report to the police station that shots had been fired. Id. p. 59, lines 1-5.

Officer Edwards testified that he did not know that Robbie Tolan was African-American until after the ambulance had left taking him to the hospital. He testified that he knew Cooper was African-American when he was lying on the ground in the front yard. Id. p. 68, lines 7-16. He was not able to see into the Nissan automobile as he was following it before Robbie Tolan and Anthony Cooper exited the car at 804 Woodstock. Id. p. 69, line 15—p. 70, line 3. He also testified that reason he followed them was not because they were black. Id. p. 65, lines 9-11

Officer Edwards testified that he heard Robbie Tolan say, “Get your fucking hands off my mother.” Id. p. 70, line 24—p. 71, line 3.

Summary Judgment

Defendants Cotton and Edwards have filed a motion for summary judgment, arguing that they have qualified immunity from the Plaintiffs’ claims and that those claims fail as a matter of law. Motions for summary judgment are governed by Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a sufficient showing of the existence of an element essential to the party’s case, and on which that party will bear the burden at trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322 (1986); Little v. Liquid Air Corp., 37 F.3d 1069, 1075 (5th Cir. 1994) (en banc); see also Baton Rouge Oil and Chem Workers Union v. ExxonMobil Corp., 289 F. 3d 373, 375 (5th Cir. 2002). In deciding a motion for summary judgment, a reviewing court must determine whether the “pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 322-23; Weaver v. CCA Indus., Inc., 529 F.3d 335, 339 (5th Cir. 2008).

For summary judgment, the initial burden falls on the movant to identify areas essential to the non-movant’s claim in which there is an “absence of a genuine issue of material fact.” Lincoln Gen. Ins. Co. v. Reyna, 401 F.3d 347, 349 (5th Cir. 2005). The moving party, however, need not negate the elements of the non-movant’s case. Boudreaux v. Swift Transp. Co., 402 F.3d 536, 540 (5th Cir. 2005). The moving party may meet its burden by pointing out “the absence of evidence supporting the nonmoving party’s case.” Duffy v. Leading Edge Products, Inc., 44 F.3d 308, 312 (5th Cir. 1995) (quoting Skotak v. Tenneco Resins, Inc., 953 F.2d 909, 913 (5th Cir. 1992)).

If the moving party meets its initial burden, the non-movant must go beyond the pleadings and designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue of material fact for trial. Littlefield v. Forney Indep.Sch.Dist., 268 F.3d 275, 282 (5th Cir. 2001) (internal citation omitted).

In deciding whether a genuine and material fact issue has been created, the facts and inferences to be drawn from them must be reviewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 478 U.S. at 587-88; see also Reaves Brokerage Co. v. Sunbelt Fruit & Vegetable Co., 336 F.3d 410, 412 (5th Cir. 2003). However, factual controversies are resolved in favor of the non-movant “only ‘when both parties have submitted evidence of contradictory facts.’” Alexander v. Eeds, 392 F.3d 138, 142 (5th Cir. 2004) (quoting Olabisiomotosho v. City of Houston, 185 F.3d 521, 525 (5th Cir. 1999)). The non-movant’s burden is not met by mere reliance on the allegations or denials in the non-movant’s pleadings. Diamond Offshore Co. v. A&B Builders, Inc., 302 F.3d 531, 545 n. 13 (5th Cir. 2002). Likewise, “conclusory allegations” or “unsubstantiated assertions” do not meet the non-movant’s burden. Delta & Pine Land Co. v. Nationwide Agribusiness Ins. Co., 530 F.3d 395, 399 (5th Cir. 2008). Instead, the nonmoving party must present specific facts which show “the existence of a genuine issue concerning every essential component of its case.” American Eagle Airlines, Inc. v. Air Line Pilots Ass’n, Int’l, 343 F.3d 401, 405 (5th Cir. 2003) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). In the absence of any proof, a reviewing court will not assume “that the non-moving party could or would prove the necessary facts,” and will grant summary judgment “in any case where critical evidence is so weak or tenuous on an essential fact that it could not support a judgment in favor of the nonmovant.” Boudreax, 402 F.3d at 540 (quoting Little, 37 F.3d at 1075) (emphasis in original).

Qualified Immunity

Under the doctrine of qualified immunity, public officials, such as police officers, acting within the scope of their authority are shielded “from liability for civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional law of which a reasonable person would have known.” Harlow

v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818 (5th Cir. 1982); Gates v. Texas Dep't of Protective and Regulatory Servs., 537 F.3d 404,418 (5th Cir. 2008). “Qualified immunity balances two important interests-- the need to hold public officials accountable when they exercise power irresponsibly and the need to shield officials from harassment, distraction, and liability when they perform their duties reasonably.” Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S.223, 231 (2009). The Supreme Court has characterized the doctrine as protecting “all but the plainly incompetent or those who knowingly violate the law.” Malley v. Briggs, 475 U.S. 335, 341 (1986).

To determine whether a government official is entitled to qualified immunity for an alleged constitutional violation, courts conduct a two-prong analysis originally set forth in Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194 (2001), overruled in part by Pearson, 555 U.S. at 236, which held that the court, contrary to Saucier's rigid one, two process, could analyze either prong before analyzing the other prong. The first prong of the Saucier analysis asks whether, taken in the light most favorable to the party asserting the injury, the facts alleged show that the official's conduct violated a constitutional right. See Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 127 S.Ct. 1769, 1774 (citing Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 201 (2001)). The second prong is a determination of whether, in the light of the specific context of the case, the right was clearly established. Id. The second prong of the Saucier analysis asks whether qualified immunity is appropriate because the defendants' actions were objectively reasonable “in light of clearly established law at the time of the conduct in question.”

See Hampton Co. Nat'l Sur., L.L.C. v. Tunica County, Miss., 543 F.3d 221, 225 (5th Cir. 2008) (quoting Freeman v. Gore, 483 F.3d 404, 410-11 (5th Cir. 2007).

In relaxing the two-prong protocol established in Saucier, Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. at 236, has clarified that courts are permitted “to exercise their sound discretion in deciding which of the two prongs of the qualified immunity analysis should be addressed first in light of the circumstances in the particular case at hand.” Id. Thus the “rigid Saucier procedure” need not be followed in any particular sequence.” Id.

Chief Judge Edith H. Jones of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals explained in Ontiveros v. City of Rosenberg, Texas, 564 F.3d 379, 383, footnote 1,

Even if the plaintiffs established that the officer used excessive force (and thus performed an unreasonable seizure under the Fourth Amendment), the court would perform an entirely separate inquiry applying a different reasonableness standard. In order to evaluate the “clearly established law” prong of the qualified immunity test, the court must ask whether, at the time of the incident, the law clearly established that such conduct would violate the right. This inquiry focuses not on the general standard--when may an officer use deadly force against a suspect?--but on the specific circumstances of the incident--could an officer have reasonably interpreted the law to conclude that the perceived threat posed by the suspect was sufficient to justify deadly force?

Brosseau v. Haugen, 543 U.S. 194, 199-200 (2004).

The usual summary judgment burden of proof is altered in the case of a qualified immunity defense. Cf. Gates v. Texas Dep't of Protective and Regulatory Servs. 537 F.3d 404, 419 (5th Cir. 2008). Although qualified immunity is called an affirmative defense, the defendant asserting qualified immunity does not have the burden to establish it. Rather, it is the plaintiff whose burden it is to negate the assertion of qualified immunity, once it is raised. Collier v. Montgomery, 569 F.3d 214, 217 (5th Cir. 2009). An official need only plead his good faith, which then shifts the burden to the plaintiff, who must rebut the defense by establishing that the official's allegedly wrongful conduct violated clearly established law. See Michalik v. Harmann, 422 F.3d 252, 262 (5th Cir. 2005) (citing Bazan v. Hidalgo County, 246 F.3d 481, 489 (5th Cir. 2001)). The plaintiff, bearing the burden of negating the defense, cannot rest on conclusory allegations and assertions, but must demonstrate genuine issues of material fact regarding the reasonableness of the official's conduct. Id. Sergeant Cotton and Officer Edwards have raised qualified immunity in their summary judgment, and "the burden of negating the defense lies with [Marian and Robbie Tolan], even on summary judgment." Brumfield v. Hollins, 551 F.3d 322, 326 (5th Cir. 2008). In other words the Plaintiffs must satisfy their burden by negating immunity by specifically identifying evidence that rebuts the Defendants' presumed entitlement to dismissal based upon qualified immunity. Whatley v. Philo, 817 F.2d 19, 20 (5th Cir. 1987).

To overcome the presumption of a law enforcement officer's qualified immunity, the actions must be viewed from the perspective of a reasonable law enforcement officer on the scene and not in hindsight. "[A] police officer views the facts through the lens of his police experience and expertise." Ornelas v. United States, 517 U.S. 690, 699 (1996). Whether a particular use of force is reasonable "must be judged from the perspective of a reasonable officer on the scene, rather than with the 20/20 vision of hindsight." Graham v. Conner, 490 U.S. 386, 396 (1989). Only those facts known to the police officer are important to the determination, not facts known only to the plaintiffs and not information subject to a variety of interpretations by individuals who are not experts. cf. United States v. Banks, 540 U.S. 31, 39 (2003).

Fourteenth Amendment Claims

Plaintiffs have brought their suit pursuant to Title 42 United States Code, Section 1983, which gives an individual cause of action for violation of a United States Constitutional right by a person acting under color of state law. To state a claim under 42 U.S.C. §1983, a plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) a violation of the United States Constitution or of federal law; and (2) that the violation was committed by someone acting under color of state law. See. Atteberry v. Nocona Gen. Hosp., 430 F.3d 245, 252-53 (5th Cir. 2005) (internal citations omitted).

Section 1983 "is not itself a source of substantive rights." Baker v. McCollan, 443 U.S. 137, 145 at fn 3 (1979). It provides "a method for vindicating federal rights elsewhere conferred." Id. To support a claim for under Section 1983, then, a plaintiff must allege a specific constitutional right that has been infringed by the defendant. Cf. County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 842 at fn 5 (1998).

The Plaintiffs have alleged that their Fourteenth Amendment rights to substantive due process of law have been infringed. The Due Process Clause protects against an “exercise of power without any reasonable justification in the service of a legitimate governmental objective” and “government power arbitrarily and oppressively exercised.” County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 846 (1998). “[O]nly the most egregious official conduct can be said to be ‘arbitrary in the constitutional sense.’” Id., quoting Collins v. Harker Heights, 503 U.S. 115,129 (1992).

When a provision of the Constitution “provides an explicit textual source of Constitutional protection, a court must assess a plaintiff’s claim under that explicit provision and not the more generalized notion of substantive due process.” Cf. Conn v. Gabbert, 526 U.S. 286, 293 (1999), quoting Graham v. Conner, 490 U.S. at 395 (1989). It has been consistently held that a allegations that a law enforcement officer has used excessive force in the course of an arrest, investigatory stop, or other seizure the case must be analyzed under the Fourth Amendment’s reasonableness standard, rather than a Fourteenth Amendment substantive due process approach. Cf. Graham v. Conner, 490 U.S. at 395. The Plaintiffs’ alleged claims for excessive force pursuant to the Fourteenth Amendment must be dismissed as not legally cognizable.

The Plaintiffs have also alleged unconstitutional stops, detentions, and seizures under the Fourteenth Amendment. These claims too are not cognizable under the Fourteenth Amendment. The Supreme Court of the United States in modern times has reserved the protections of substantive due process to matters relating to marriage, family, procreation, and the right of bodily integrity. Cf. Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 272 (1994). The Fourteenth Amendment was drafted to protect matters of pretrial deprivations of liberty. Id. at 274. An unlawful detention claim cannot fall under the umbrella of a violation of substantive due process. The Plaintiffs' claims for detention brought pursuant to the Fourteenth Amendment must also be dismissed.

Plaintiffs have also brought suit against Sergeant Cotton and Officer Edwards for their alleged violation of their Equal Protection rights under the Fourteenth Amendment. The Equal Protection Clause requires that similarly situated persons be treated alike. Rolf v. City of San Antonio, 77 F.3d 823, 828 (5th Cir. 1996). An equal protection challenge to actions under the color of state law pursuant to the Equal Protection Clause can be successful “[o]nly if the challenged government action classifies or distinguishes between two or more relevant groups of people. Outb v. Strauss, 11 F. 3d 488, 492 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1127 (1994). The Plaintiffs “must prove that similarly situated individuals were treated differently.” Bryan v. City of Madison, 213 F.3d 267, 276 (5th Cir. 2000). The Plaintiffs have alleged their personal beliefs that race was a factor in the adverse actions taken against them by the Defendants in this case, but such a personal belief, unsubstantiated, cannot support their claim of denial of equal protection of the laws. Edwards v.

Woods, 51 F.3d 577, 580 (5th Cir. 1995). The Plaintiff must allege and ultimately prove facts that show such an improper motivation. Allen v. Thomas, 388 F.3d 147, 149 (5th Cir. 2004), Jones v. Greninger, 188 F.3d 322, 325 (5th Cir. 1999). Officer Edwards testified that he did not know the Robbie Tolan and Anthony Cooper were African American until they refused to submit to temporary detention. He did not know that Mr. and Mrs. Tolan were African American until they stepped outside on the porch of their house. Doc. 67, Exhibit 4, p 66, lines 7-16; p. 79, lines 5-11; page 19, lines 4-12. Sergeant Cotton testified that he did not know of the race of any of the Plaintiffs until after he exited his police car at the Tolan residence. Doc. 67, Exhibit 2, page 34, lines 13-19. There is simply no admissible evidence Plaintiffs can point to that contradicts this testimony, nor any admissible evidence that either officer was motivated to act due to the race of any of the Plaintiffs. To succeed on a claim of denial of equal protection Plaintiffs must show that Sergeant Cotton's or Officer Edwards's actions were not rationally related to a legitimate state objective or that either of them have treated similarly situated individuals of another race differently under the same or similar circumstances. Cf. Bryan v. City of Madison, 213 F.3d at 277. Again, Plaintiffs have pointed to no admissible evidence to establish this claim. Plaintiffs' claim for denial of equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment must be denied.

Fourth Amendment Claims

“Fourth Amendment claims are appropriate [only] when the complaint contests the method or basis of the arrest and seizure of the person.” Jones v. City of Jackson, 203 F.3d 875, 880 (5th Cir. 2000), quoting Brooks v. George County, Miss., 84 F.3d 157, 166 (5th Cir. 1996).

“The Fourth Amendment prohibits unreasonable seizures, not unreasonable or ill-advised conduct in general. Consequently, [the courts] scrutinize only the seizure itself, not the events leading to the seizure, for reasonableness under the Fourth Amendment.” Cole v. Bone, 993 F.2d 1328, 1333 (8th Cir. 1993), quoting Carter v. Buscher, 973 F.2d 1328, 1333 (7th Cir. 1992).

Stop and Detention of Robbie Tolan, Anthony Cooper, Marian Tolan, and Bobby Tolan

A police officer has the authority to stop and detain briefly an individual in order to perform an investigation based upon reasonable suspicion of possible criminal activity. Goodson v. City of Corpus Christi, 202 F.3d 730, 736 (5th Cir. 2000), citing Terry v. Ohio, 3932 U.S. 1, 30 (1968). Only a minimum level of objective justification, considering the totality of the circumstances, is required for a constitutionally permissible investigative stop and detention. United States v. Michelletti, 13 F.3d 838, 840 (5th Cir. 1994); see also United States v. Ibarra-Sanchez, 199 F.3d 753, 759 fn. 5 (5th Cir. 1999). Whether an investigative detention is justified does not depend upon a confirmation of the officer’s suspicions that an offense has been committed, nor does it depend upon how likely it is that the officer’s suspicions are correct. Cf. Jewett v. Anders, 521 F.3d 818, 823-27 (7th Cir. 2008).

Justification to detain a suspect for any suspected offense is a complete defense to an unlawful arrest claim under Section 1983 if any reasonable police officer could have believed that reasonable suspicion could have existed. Cf. Pfannstiel v. City of Marion, 918 F.2d 1178, 1183 (5th Cir. 1990). During an investigative detention it is lawful for officers to “take such steps as are reasonably necessary to protect their personal safety and to maintain the status quo during the course of the stop.” United States v. Hensley, 469 U.S. 221, 235, (1985); United States v. Campbell, 178 F.3d 345, 348-349 (5th Cir. 1999); United States v. Sanders, 994 F.2d 200, 210 (5th Cir. 1993).

The Texas Penal Code, Section 38.15, addresses interference with a law enforcement officer’s public duties, and under that statute a person commits an offense when, with criminal negligence that person interrupts, disrupts, impedes, or otherwise interferes with a peace officer while the peace officer is performing a duty or exercising authority imposed or granted by law. “Indeed, citizens have no right to intervene in lawful police business.” Mouille v. City of Live Oak, 977 F.2d 924, 928 (5th Cir. 1993).

It is unclear whether the Plaintiffs are even arguing that the investigative detentions they experienced were unreasonable, but under the factual circumstances of the case, the investigative detentions were reasonable. Officer Edwards was patrolling before two a.m. in an area where there had been a number of car thefts; he was driving behind a Nissan SUV, which he saw making a hurried turn onto Woodstock Street, a street he knew to be a cul-de sac; when he saw the SUV park on Woodstock, he followed it down the street. Officer Edwards typed the SUV’s license plate number into his police car computer, and the computer reported the

SUV stolen. Officer Edwards was unaware that he had typed one digit of the number incorrectly. He called for back up and waited. He next saw the two male occupants of the automobile, Robbie Tolan and Anthony Cooper, exit it and proceed to walk towards a home on the street. Officer Edwards then exited his police car, drew his service weapon, and shouted for the two men to “come here,” which they did not do; they continued to walk to the house. The two men shouted verbal abuse at Officer Edwards and asked him “why?” He informed them he believed their automobile to be stolen. He also shouted to them to get down on the ground, which the two men also did not do. He called for backup. Quickly thereafter two occupants of the home Marian and Bobby Tolan exited the home, and told the two men to obey the police. At the request of Officer Edwards the man from the house, Bobby Tolan, went to stand by the automobile parked in the driveway. The woman from the house, Marian Tolan, started to walk around the yard. She was upset and loudly protested the police presence. At some point in this very short space of time Sergeant Cotton arrived, received a very short briefing from Officer Edwards and proceeded to take Marian Tolan, in hand. Up to that point the facts are undisputed in the record. There was a report of a stolen vehicle, which the officers had information was the SUV parked in front of the house on Woodstock Street; this justified the officers to investigate whether the SUV was stolen and whether the former occupants of the SUV or the former occupants of the house had an involvement in the theft of the SUV. Marian Tolan was walking around the yard, getting in the way of Officer Edwards’s pointed weapon, upset, angry, and loudly protesting the innocence of her son and nephew, and refusing to stand in a safe place next to the garage. The activities warranted Sergeant Cotton's efforts to calm her and put her into a neutral position. Reasonable suspicion existed to temporarily detain the Plaintiffs, the individuals associated with the reportedly stolen vehicle. This brief detention did not violate their rights under the Fourth Amendment. Cf. Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968).

Reasonable suspicion also existed to briefly detain the Tolans and Cooper after Robbie Tolan was shot. "The permissible scope of a Terry stop has expanded [] to include the use of handcuffs and temporary detention in squad cars." United States v. Stewart, 388 F.3d 1079, 1084 (7th Cir. 2004). Cooper was handcuffed, searched, and placed in a police car by a Bellaire police officer other than Sergeant Cotton or Officer Edwards. At that point Cooper was still a potential car theft suspect. Marian and Bobby Tolan were each also placed in police cars by other officers. The exigent circumstances in the immediate aftermath of the shooting and the need to protect the integrity of the investigation of the stolen automobile and Sergeant Cotton's use of force raised reasonable suspicion to justify the brief detention of the Tolans and Anthony Cooper. Compare Mouille, 977 F. 2d at 928; see also Illinois v. Lidster, 540 U.S. 419, 426-427 (2004); Walker v. City of Orem, 451 F.3d 1139, 1148 (10th Cir. 2006), discussing unreasonableness of detaining mere witnesses.

After other Bellaire police officers determined their identities and that the automobile in question was not stolen, Mr. and Mrs. Tolan and Anthony Cooper were released. There is no question that under Terry the investigative detention of all four individuals, Anthony Cooper (detained in a police car for approximately an hour) and Marian and Bobby Tolan (detained in police cars for twenty-five minutes) was constitutional. More importantly however, these post-shooting detentions were made by other Bellaire police officers not by the Defendants, Sergeant Cotton and Officer Edwards.

Use of Excessive Force

An allegation that an officer used excessive force in the course of a seizure does not create a separate unconstitutional detention claim distinct from the excessive force claim. See Flores v. City of Palacios, 381 F.3d 391, 403 (5th Cir. 2004). A plaintiff may not support an alleged unlawful detention claim by alleging that an officer used excessive force during the detention. Cf. Id.

In order to prevail on an excessive force claim, a plaintiff must show (1) some injury; (2) which resulted directly and only from a use of force that was clearly excessive to the need; and (3) the excessiveness of which was objectively unreasonable. Ontiveros v. City of Rosenberg, 564 F.3d 379, 382 (5th Cir. 2009).

BOBBY TOLAN

Marian and Bobby Tolan both testified that neither Officer Edwards, nor Sergeant Cotton used any force against Bobby Tolan. His claims against Sergeant Edwards and Officer Edwards for use of excessive force against him must be dismissed.

ANTHONY COOPER

Anthony Cooper was also not subjected to use of excessive force. In his deposition he testified that he thought Officer Edwards had put him in handcuffs, and the handcuffs were uncomfortable. Doc. 67, Exhibit 16, page 90, line 11 -- page 91, line 24. It is undisputed that another officer put Anthony Cooper in handcuffs, and even if Officer Edwards did, the use of handcuffs in the manner to which Anthony Cooper testified cannot support a claim of use of excessive force. Cf. Tarver v. City of Edna, 410 F.3d 745, 751-52 (5th Cir. 2005). “An officer may handcuff a suspect when ‘reasonably necessary to maintain the status quo and protect [officer] safety during an investigative stop.’” Young v. Prince George’s County, 355 F.3d 751, 755 (4th Cir. 2004), quoting United States v. Taylor, 857 F.2d 210, 213 (4th Cir. 1988). Anthony Cooper’s claim of excessive force must be dismissed.

MARIAN TOLAN

Marian Tolan makes no allegation that Officer Edwards used any force against her. Doc. 67, Exhibit 17, p. 18, line 25 --page 19, line 7; page 19, line 21--page 20, line 11. Marian Tolan’s claim against Officer Edwards for use of excessive force must be dismissed.

Marian Tolan has made a claim of use of excessive force against Sergeant Cotton in taking her arm and later pushing her against the garage door. A police officer is not subjected to liability because he uses force while carrying out his duties, and he cannot be held responsible for unexpected consequences of the use of necessary force. Hill v. Carrol County, 587 F.3d 230, 237 (5th Cir. 2009). “Fourth Amendment jurisprudence has long recognized that the right to make an arrest or investigatory stop necessarily carries with it the right to use some degree of physical coercion or threat thereof to affect it.” Graham, 490 U.S. at 396. “Not every push or shove, even if it may later seem unnecessary in the peace of a judge’s chambers, violates the Fourth Amendment.” Id., quoting Johnson v. Glick, 481, F.2d 1028, 1033, cert denied, 414 U.S. 1033 (1973). “The calculus of reasonableness must embody allowance for the fact that police officers are often forced to make split-second judgments--in circumstances that are tense, uncertain, and rapidly evolving--about the amount of force that is necessary in a particular situation.” Id., at 396-397.

Marian Tolan, who was upset, walking around the yard, and shouting, was an individual out of control. There is no dispute about that. Sergeant Cotton needed to bring her under control, quiet her down, and have her stand in one place, so that he could hand cuff Robbie Tolan, who was by that time lying prone, on his stomach, on the porch of the home and search him for weapons. He also needed to hand cuff Cooper, who was lying on his back in the front yard and search him for weapons. This was a dangerous and uncertain scene. In such a situation officers must stop and control suspects and other persons’ movements so that they can safely confirm the identities of unknown persons before they can safely identify and handcuff, and verify the information and the suspects. Cf. Jewett v. Anders, 521 F.3d F3d 827 (7th Cir. 2008). When Marian Tolan refused to stand next to the garage door as Sergeant Cotton requested, he took her right arm, put his left arm in the small of her back and began to walk her toward the garage. Robbie Tolan, watching from his prone position, with his head over his left shoulder, testified that while Sergeant Cotton was moving to the garage door area, he was holding Marian Tolan's arm, "kind of pushing her a little bit, kind of directing her." Robbie Tolan further testified that "There was no tussle. I mean, but she – she wasn't exactly running over there either." Id. p 80, lines 3-24. Robbie Tolan's description of these particular events are completely consistent with Sergeant Cotton's recollection. Then, just before Sergeant Cotton and Marian Tolan reached the garage door, Sergeant Cotton pushed Marian Tolan, and she hit the garage door with what several witnesses described as a loud banging sound. Mrs. Tolan believed that Sergeant Cotton had maliciously slammed her into the metal garage door. Sergeant Cotton testified that he pushed her because after he heard Robbie Tolan shout words to the effect of "Get your fucking hands off her," he saw Robbie Tolan getting up and he wanted to get Marian Tolan out of the way so that he could deal with Robbie Tolan. Anthony Cooper testified that when Marian Tolan hit the garage door Robbie Tolan said, "What are you doing to my mom--doing to my mom?" Doc. 70, Exhibit 7, page 78, lines 17-25. Whether Sergeant Cotton pushed Marian Tolan before or after Robbie Tolan's shout is immaterial to the issue to be determined. Did Sergeant Cotton use excessive force to move Marian Tolan to a neutral place so that he could continue the investigation? Marian Tolan had injected herself into the police investigation by refusing to comply with Sergeant Cotton's requests to move out of the way. She obviously did not see the situation in the same way Sergeant Cotton saw it, but looking at the scene objectively, Sergeant Cotton's actions were reasonable.

App. 70

Taking her arm and walking her toward the garage was not an excessive use of force, nor was pushing Marian Tolan away once he heard the shout and saw Robbie Tolan in the act of getting up from a prone position. Forcefully and intentionally shoving or pushing a woman into a metal garage door could be excessive force under other circumstances, but the circumstances here were tense and unusual. There is no question that within a matter of seconds three things happened: (1) Robbie Tolan shouted at Sergeant Cotton, “Get your fucking hands off her; (2) Robbie Tolan quickly began to move from his prone position facing the front door 180 degrees around to a position, as he testified, on his knees facing Sergeant Cotton, and (3) Marian Tolan hit the garage door with a loud noise. “There can be a constitutional violation only if injuries resulted from the officer’s use of excessive force. Injuries which result from, for example, an officer’s justified use of force to overcome resistance to arrest do not implicate constitutionally protected interests.” Johnson v. Morel, 876 F.2d 477, 479-80 (5th Cir. 1989) (en banc). If any of the elements of a claim under this test fails, so does the plaintiff’s claim. Id. Viewed objectively, the force Sergeant Cotton used to push Marian Tolan, it was not excessive to the need, nor unreasonable under the circumstances. Cf. Collier v. Montgomery County, 569 F.3d 214, 219 (5th Cir. 2009). Marian Tolan’s claim of use of excessive force against Sergeant Cotton must be dismissed.

ROBBIE TOLAN

There is no allegation that Officer Edwards used any force whatsoever on Robbie Tolan. The only allegation he makes against Officer Edwards is that Officer Edwards negligently typed into his police car computer the wrong license plate number. Doc. 67, Exhibit 15, page 59, line 18 -- page 60, line 21; page 61, line 11 -- page 62, line 10. In Fraire v. City of Arlington, 957 F. 2d 1268, 1276 (5th Cir. 1996), Fifth Circuit Judge Jacques Weiner wrote on behalf of the panel, “The constitutional right to be free from unreasonable seizure has never been equated by the Court with the right to be free from a negligently executed stop or arrest.” Robbie Tolan’s claim against Officer Edwards for excessive use of force must be dismissed.

Robbie Tolan argues that Sergeant Cotton used deadly force that was objectively unreasonable under the circumstances, when Sgt. Cotton shot him. Sergeant Cotton testified that he fired the shot in self defense because he feared for his life, believing Robbie Tolan was pulling a weapon from his waistband area. Robbie Tolan maintains that there are genuine issues of material fact as to whether Sergeant Cotton’s use of deadly force was objectively reasonable. Moreover, he argues “the material fact issues [are] heavily disputed.” Doc. 70 at 21. Robbie Tolan and Sergeant Cotton are the only two people who can provide factual information regarding the observations Sergeant Cotton made, which led him to fire.

Plaintiffs base their main argument that there are material fact questions precluding summary judgment on the differences in details of the testimony of the various eye witnesses on three inter-related subjects: (1) when Robbie Tolan told Sergeant Cotton to get his hands off his mother, either before or after Mrs. Tolan hit the metal door of the garage, causing a loud metallic banging sound, (2) exactly where Robbie Tolan was vertically located when he was shot, and (3) where Robbie Tolan's hands were as he was getting from his horizontal position, prone and on his stomach on the porch, with his head facing in the opposite direction of the garage, to his vertical position facing Sergeant Cotton at the time he was shot.

App. 73

Robbie Tolan, Marian Tolan, Anthony Cooper, and Officer Edwards all testified that Robbie Tolan yelled to Sergeant Cotton after Marian Tolan hit the garage door. Sergeant Cotton testified that Robbie Tolan yelled to him before he pushed Marian Tolan away, and she hit the garage door. Sergeant Cotton testified, "I do not disagree that the noise [of Mrs. Tolan hitting the garage door] happened. . . . I disagree as to when the noise happened." Id., Exhibit 1, page 61, line 7 through page 62, line 18. The fourth eye witnesses, Bobby Tolan, did not hear his son shout at Sergeant Cotton. This disputed fact is not material to the determination of the issue of qualified immunity. It is not disputed that Robbie Tolan shouted at Sergeant Cotton and quickly got up from his prone position and turned his body around.

Plaintiffs argue that Sergeant Cotton has been inconsistent in his testimony concerning where Robbie Tolan's hands were at the time he was shot. They highlight Sergeant Cotton's deposition testimony, in which, they argue, he does not disagree with the premise that the Tolans' testimony concerning whether Robbie Tolan was reaching for a gun at the time Sergeant Cotton shot him or was "on a knee" when he was shot was conflicting. The last quoted question and answer from Sergeant Cotton's deposition reads

App. 74

Question: Well, their statement is different from your statement. Do you understand that?

....

Answer: I don't think I can answer entirely-- I suppose there are some things in their statement that are different.

Doc. 70, Ex. 1, page 73, lines 17-18 and 21-23

Plaintiffs do not quote the objection to the question, "misrepresents the record." Id. at page 73, lines lines 19-20. Nor do they quote the continuation of Sergeant Cotton's answer to the question, "I would have to go back and read--you know I don't think I can answer that here." Doc. 71, Ex. 33, page 73, lines 24--page 74, line 1. Defendants' Reply to Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendants' Edwards and Cotton, Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 71) quotes extensively from excerpts from Sergeant Cotton's deposition (Ex. 32 and 33) that give the complete back and forth between Plaintiffs' attorney and Sergeant Cotton on the issue of Sergeant Cotton's disagreement with the testimony of Robbie and Marian Tolan. Id. at 16-19. In none of these excerpts does Sergeant Cotton acquiesce that there is a material difference between his testimony and that of the Tolans.

The Plaintiffs also argue that the testimony concerning where Robbie Tolan was vertically situated just before he was shot creates material fact questions that would prohibit summary judgment on the defense of qualified immunity. The testimony differs among the witnesses in the case. Paragraph 21 of Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendants' Edwards' and Cotton's

App. 75

Motion for Summary Judgment states, “In response to Cotton shoving Marian Tolan against the garage door, Robbie Tolan yelled at Cotton to get his hands off his mother, brought his arms to his chest, and pushed himself up onto his knees.” Doc. 70 at 6-7. Robbie Tolan testified to this at the trial of Sergeant Cotton. Doc. 70, Exhibit 3, vol. 2, page 149, lines 22-23.

At his deposition Robbie Tolan’s testimony was similar to his trial testimony. He testified that he was lying on the ground<sup>3</sup> on his stomach, with his arms out in front of him and his head turned to the left. In order to get up he drew back his hands to from where they were to “about mid body” and had to push up with both his hands in a “kind of push up maneuver.” As he was pushing up he was also turning towards his left. Id., Exhibit 6, page 100, line 9--page 101, line 8. Robbie Tolan testified later in the deposition, “I didn’t jump up off the ground. I just simply got up. Started to get up.” Id. Exhibit 6, page 110, lines 12-13. “Before I could stand up, I was shot.” Id. Exhibit 6, page 146, line 14.

Marian Tolan, gave similar testimony at Sergeant Cotton’s trial:

Question: When you were slammed into the garage door what happened next Ms. Tolan?

---

<sup>3</sup> He was actually on the porch of the house. Throughout the trial testimony and deposition testimony it is often referred to by various witnesses as “the ground.”

App. 76

Answer: Robbie said something like get your fucking hands off my mom or you don't have to shove my mom. Something to that nature. . . .

Question: And Robbie was still laying upon the porch with his head next to the door?

Answer: Yes. Yes. But he was still looking. When I hit the garage door and I looked at him and he looked to the right and then he looked to the left and when he looked to the left is when he addressed him. . . .

Question: Ms. Tolan Robbie was shot in the front of his chest. How would the bullet get there if he didn't get up?

Answer: You mean was he standing?

Question: Was Robbie getting up off of the ground facing you and this officer?

Answer: Yes.

Question: Okay

Answer: On his knees. He was not standing

Question: How far up did Robbie make it?

Answer: I think he -- it seems to me he was on his knees. He was by then up on his knees.

Question: Okay.

App. 77

Answer: At an angle.

Question: What happened when he got up on his knees?

Answer: He was shot.

Id., Exhibit 9, vol. 2, page 104, line 7-- page 105, line 16.

Officer Edwards testified at Sergeant Cotton's trial, "I heard a bang [the sound of something hitting the metallic garage door] and then he--the gentleman [Robbie Tolan] laying behind the Sego Palm either said don't touch my mama or something. . . .which drew my attention back to him because I saw his hands had disappeared." Id., Exhibit 4, vol 1, page 64, lines 18-25 through page 65, lines 1 through 16. After Robbie Tolan's hands disappeared, Officer Edwards testified "His head and shoulders had then disappeared behind the -- [Sego Palm]. . . . I couldn't see him anymore behind that bush." Id., Exhibit 4, vol. 1, page 65, lines 16-25. To the question, "What happened next," Officer Edwards answered, "Then I saw his head and shoulders come up above the bush and he was turned towards--facing Cotton and appeared to be charging or rushing." Id., Exhibit 4, vol. 1, page 66, lines 1-4. Officer Edwards elaborated that he appeared to be charging or running, " 'cause his shoulders and head were kind of hunched when he was getting up. . . . Like fixing to take off." Id., Exhibit 4, vol. 1, page 65, lines 23 through page 66, line 1.

Sergeant Cotton testified at his deposition that when he had almost gotten Mrs. Tolan to the garage door, she told him to take his hands off her. About that time he looked over at Robbie on the porch, then had his attention back on Mrs. Tolan when he “heard Robbie yelling. . . . get your fucking hands off her.” Sergeant Cotton and Mrs. Tolan had not yet made it to the garage door when he heard Robbie Tolan’s yelling. It was then that he pushed Mrs. Tolan out of the way, and she hit the garage door with a bang. Id., Exhibit 1, page 60, line 7-- page 18. Sergeant Cotton testified that when he heard Robbie Tolan yell, he looked at him, and “[Robbie Tolan] was getting up and turning around. Id., Exhibit 1, page 61, line 25--page 62, line 1. Sergeant Cotton did not know where Robbie Tolan was when he yelled at him. Id. Exhibit 1, page 62, line 15. Sergeant Cotton further testified that “At some point in the altercation [Robbie Tolan] was leaning in my direction. Id., Exhibit 1, page 62, lines 18-19. Sergeant Cotton did not see him move his hands and push himself off the ground in a push-up maneuver. Id., Exhibit 1, page 64, lines 20-25. When Sergeant Cotton heard Robbie Tolan yell he looked over and saw that “he was up in a crouch kind of in the process of getting up with his feet under him facing kind of away from me while--as he was rotating to his right.” Id., Exhibit 1, page 65, lines 2-5. Sergeant Cotton testified that Robbie Tolan was not running toward him, but turning around to face Sergeant Cotton. He was on both feet. Id. Exhibit 1, page 65, 20-- 66, line 3.

Contrary to Plaintiffs’ argument in their Response, Document 70, paragraph 22, Sergeant Cotton did not testify that Robbie Tolan stood to his full height on his feet. There is no testimony in this summary judgment record that Robbie Tolan was standing up, except his own testimony cited in Defendants’ reply to Plaintiffs’ response (Doc. 71). Robbie Tolan testified at Sergeant Cotton's criminal trial, "After I was shot the bullet lifted me to my feet and against the front door." Doc. 71, Exhibit 32, vol. 1, page 96, 12-13. This testimony is not material to a determination of where Robbie Tolan was situated immediately before he was shot.

App. 79

Similarly, Plaintiffs' argument in paragraph 24 of Document 70 is flawed. Officer Edwards did not testify that Robbie Tolan "charged" Sergeant Cotton. His testimony was Robbie Tolan stood "fully on his feet. . . . in a crouch--as in a charging position. . . ." Doc. 70, Exhibit 5, page 53, lines 15-22. When asked later, however, if Robbie Tolan was on one or both of his knees, Officer Edwards testified that he could not see Robbie Tolan's feet. Id., Exhibit 5, page 54, line 3. He maintained nevertheless that Robbie Tolan "was in basically a hunched charging position. . . . It looked like he was going to go forward, forward motion." Id., Exhibit 5, page 54, lines 15-19. Officer Edwards later testified, "I couldn't see [Robbie Tolan's] hands--his knees or his feet." Id., Exhibit 5, page 56, lines 9-10 In Officer Edwards testimony at the trial of Sergeant Cotton he testified that at first he could see Robbie Tolan's hands above his head and his legs straight out behind him as he lay on his stomach on the porch. Then Robbie Tolan disappeared completely behind the sago palm plant. Then he saw Robbie Tolan's "head and shoulders come up above the bush and he was turned towards -- facing Cotton and he appeared to be charging or rushing." Id., Exhibit 4, page 66, lines 2-16. He further testified that Robbie Tolan appeared to be charging or running, " 'cause his shoulders and head were kind of hunched when he was getting up. . . . like fixing to take off." Id., Exhibit 4, page 66, line 22--page 67, line 1.<sup>4</sup> Although Officer Edwards refers to Robbie Tolan's position in terms of movement, it is clear that Officer Edwards is not testifying that Robbie Tolan was actually moving towards Sergeant Cotton, but, rather, was in a position to begin movement towards Sergeant Cotton.

What remains is a dispute as to whether Robbie Tolan was on his knees, as he and his mother testified or crouched on his two feet as Sergeant Cotton testified. In any event there is no dispute that in a matter of a very few seconds Robbie Tolan went from a prone position lying on the porch with his arms and head facing in the opposite direction to the garage door, the place Sergeant Cotton and Mrs. Tolan were standing, to a position, from Officer Edwards's viewpoint, behind the potted sago palm, with his head and shoulders above the palm, facing Sergeant Cotton and his mother. He was not yet fully standing up, nor was he moving towards Sergeant Cotton, but he was in the process of standing up. The facts that he quickly got up from a prone position on the porch, yelled to Sergeant Cotton to take his "fucking hands" off his mother, and turned around to face Sergeant Cotton are material facts, and about them there is no dispute.

Plaintiffs' argue that "Robbie Tolan did not reach for his waistband area." Document No. 70 at Paragraph 23. Robbie Tolan testified that he did not reach for his waistband area, and we now know that he did not have a weapon of any kind. Document No. 70, Exhibit 3, vol.

---

<sup>4</sup> The remainder of the testimony on page 67 is it is garbled and impossible to understand.

2, page 152, lines 8-11. Sergeant Cotton testified at his deposition that as Robbie Tolan was getting up, as he was rotating to his right, his right arm was at his waistband and he did not know where his left arm was. Doc 70, Exhibit 1, page 65, lines 1-8. He then clarified that “at his waistband” meant “In the middle, middle of his waist. . . . Like where his belt buckle would be.” Id., Exhibit 1, page 65, lines 9-15. Robbie Tolan was wearing a hoodie that was not tucked into his pants, but was hanging over them. Sergeant Cotton testified that in his experience he found it to be often the case that people carried weapons “in their midsection in their waistband.” Id., Exhibit 1, page 65, line 16--page 66, line 1. He was then asked if he hadn’t testified at his criminal trial that “he was digging in his waistband.” Id., Exhibit 1, page 66, lines 3-4. After checking the transcript of his trial testimony Sergeant Cotton answered,

Yeah. It says ‘like he was digging in his waistband.’ That’s a description trying to give a description of what he was doing. . . . ‘like’ meaning that his hand was in that area. . . . I don’t -- but I don’t -- I don’t mean that to mean, though, that he was reaching down inside of his pants necessarily. That’s not --that wouldn’t be accurately what I saw. . . . It appeared that he was drawing a weapon from his waistband. . . . Oh, I don’t know that I could see his hand specifically. I could see where his hand was, but, you know, his clothing was probably covering the hand. It was dark. I could see his total movement, which is what made me believe that it wasn't necessarily just where his hand was,

for instance.

Id., Exhibit 1, page 66, line 12 -- page 67, line 16

Plaintiffs argue in Document 70, paragraph 3 that this quoted explanation and clarification of his trial testimony in fact presents a "different version of the facts," and that Sergeant Cotton has disputed the material facts about which he testified previously, which Plaintiffs characterize as ". . . he shot Robbie Tolan because Tolan was 'digging' in his waistband."

In fact, Sergeant Cotton testified at his trial

Answer: I pushed [Mrs. Tolan] and took probably at least a step away from her and turned to face [Robbie Tolan] and began to draw my weapon.

Question: What did you see that caused your concern?

Answer: His hand was coming from his waistband, from the middle of his --

Question: Can you turn around and demonstrate for the jury?

Answer: As he was--his hand was like this. This is where his right hand was in the middle of his waist.

Question: Okay

App. 83

Answer: Like he was digging in his waistband.

Doc. 70, Exhibit 2, page 127, lines 7-17

These two quoted passages, one from his deposition and one from his trial testimony do not present “different versions of the facts.” Sergeant Cotton has not changed his testimony. In his deposition Sergeant Cotton further testified that he knew that Robbie Tolan’s hand was in the vicinity of his waistband; Robbie Tolan was not running towards him, but was turning around to face Sergeant Cotton; Robbie Tolan was on both feet. Id., Exhibit 1, page 67, line 17 -- page 68, line 3.

There is also no dispute that (1) the situation was tense, (2) Sergeant Cotton was new to the situation, (3) Sergeant Cotton needed to calm and have stay in one place one of the persons on the scene, Mrs. Tolan, who was being disruptive and getting in the line of fire of Officer Edwards’ pointed weapon, (4) Sergeant Cotton had been informed that the two persons “on the ground,” and (5) Robbie Tolan, who was lying prone on the front porch of the house, and Cooper, who was lying on his back in the yard, were suspected of felony automobile theft.

In order to conduct the investigation Sergeant, Cotton asked Mrs. Tolan to stand next to the door of the garage. When she failed to co-operate, he took one of her arms and put his hand on her back and guided her towards the garage door. In the next few seconds, as they got close to the garage door, either before or after Sergeant Cotton pushed Mrs. Tolan away and into the garage door, Robbie Tolan yelled to Sergeant Cotton, “get your fucking hands off my mother,” and Sergeant Cotton saw Robbie Tolan get up from his prone position into a crouching position, either on his knees or feet, and rotate his body around to face Sergeant Cotton. Robbie Tolan testified at his deposition that he was, in fact, getting up and turning around to face Sergeant Cotton. At this point in the time line there are no genuine issues of material fact in dispute.

Sergeant Cotton further testified it was at this point in the time line that he also saw Robbie Tolan’s hand in the vicinity of his waistband and believed that Robbie Tolan was in the process of pulling out a firearm. Sergeant Cotton feared for his life and fired three shots, one of which hit Robbie Tolan, severely wounding him.

The fact that Robbie Tolan did not reach for his waistband area is not material to the determination of whether Sergeant Cotton should be entitled to the defense of qualified immunity. Rather, it is the reasonable officer’s perception of the situation that decides qualified immunity. “An officer’s use of deadly force is presumptively reasonable when the officer has reason to believe that the suspect poses a threat of serious harm to the officer or to others.” Ontiveros v. City of Rosenberg, 564 F.3d at 382 (5th Cir. 2000); accord Manis v. Lawson, 585 F.3d 839, 844 (5th Cir. 2009). It is of no moment that a suspect is ultimately found not to have posed a risk of serious harm. “The sad truth is that [the suspect’s] actions alone could cause a reasonable officer to fear imminent and serious physical harm” that justifies the use of deadly force.

Reese v. Anderson, 926 F.2d 494, 500-501 (5th Cir. 1991). “No right is guaranteed by federal law that one will be free from circumstances where he will be endangered by the misinterpretation of his acts.” Young v. City of Killeen, 775 F.2d 1349, 1353 (5th Cir. 1985).

Plaintiffs’ contend in their response to the motion for summary judgment that Robbie Tolan angrily shouted, “get your fucking hands off my mother,” got up on his knees, rotated his body around to face Sgt. Cotton, and did not make any movements towards his waistband area. Defendants argue that the totality of these circumstances would have led a reasonable officer to perceive that he was under threat of serious harm, regardless of “whether any of the claimed discrete disputed facts existed or occurred.” Doc. 71, at 5.

The issue to be decided is not whether Sergeant Cotton, but any reasonable officer could have evaluated the totality of the circumstances confronting Sergeant Cotton that early morning and reached the decision that under the law deadly force was permissible.

Defendants rely upon the sworn statements of two experts, William Lewinski (Doc. 67, Exhibit 27), an expert in the training and evaluation of police officer shootings and the analysis of human perception, memory, and reaction time, and Lieutenant Albert Rodriguez (Doc. 67, Exhibit 29), an expert in police training. Lieutenant Rodriguez’s deposition is Doc. 67, Exhibit

Lieutenant Rodriguez testified in his deposition concerning the issue of whether a reasonable officer, in the circumstances confronting Sgt. Cotton, would reasonably believe that Robbie Tolan was about to draw a weapon from his waistband:

Question: And is moving his arms though they are at his side and pulled toward his body, though they are at his side, that gives the officer in the totality of the circumstances, moving his arms to his side without moving them toward his body, that is enough to make the officer think that the--make Sergeant Cotton think that Robbie Tolan is reaching for his waistband, is that your testimony?

Answer: Sir, I believe a push-up position is, as he [Robbie Tolan] describes it, a push-up position is somewhere close to his body not out away from his body. And when he turns, based on the totality of the circumstances, I believe based on how Texas police officers are trained that a reasonable law enforcement officer could have perceived that deadly force, could have had a reasonable belief that deadly force was immediately necessary.

Question: And is it your testimony that you believe that Robbie Tolan testified that he pulled his arms toward his body?

Answer: I believe he said his midsection, his hands were brought to about the midpoint of his body in a push-up position.

* * *

Question: Now, since I just read it to you, I am asking whether you concluded from reading that, that his hands moved toward his waistband?

Answer: Again, my conclusion, sir was based on how law enforcement officers are trained. And I believe the way Texas police officers are trained that based on a getting up from a prone position, hands have to be close to the body. And if he turns, those hands are going to be somewhere in the waistband area, if he turns very quickly as he describes. So I believe that they are going to be-- I believe they are going to be very close to the waistband area. And I believe that he said -- he says that he is turning at the time that he was shot. So based on how law enforcement officer's --trained, a reasonable officer could reasonably believe that he is reaching for the waistband.

Doc. 67, Exhibit 28, page 56, line 24 -- 57, line 57; page 61, line 19 --page 62, line 19.

In his report Lieutenant Rodriguez states:

70. Contemporary law enforcement training does not advocate for police officers to wait until they positively confirm that a suspect has a weapon before the use of deadly force is justified. . . .[A] suspect's actions are going to be faster than the officer's reaction. Law enforcement training specifically addresses the fact that a suspect can access a firearm from the waistband and shoot before an officer can react to shoot. Officers are trained to understand that even if the officer is able to shoot at the same time that the suspect fires, it is of no advantage to the officer. Shooting at the same time the suspect does means the officers could also get killed or seriously injured.

App. 88

Doc. 67, Exhibit 29, paragraph 70, page 23.

Mr. Lewinsky's report is in a similar vein:

16. Someone who is defiantly non-compliant and whose hands are in, going to, or appear to be going to their waistband area, certainly creates a very real threat to the officer. Even in baseball, the average batter in a pro game has approximately a half a second (travel time of the ball from the pitcher's mound to home plate) to react to the ball. In this type of situation the officer has half that time or less to read and then react to that situation.

17. It is obvious but worthy to note that all thought and action take time. The more complicated the decisions and actions are or the more dynamic the circumstances of the decision, then the longer the decision and action will usually take to complete. However, it is clear that the perception of threat, the decision to start shooting, the drawing of a gun from a holster, the alignment of the gun and the actual completion of the trigger pull take time. Reactive behavior of all kind takes time. From our peer reviewed research we know that the average officer, under good laboratory conditions can react to a clear stimulus, pull a gun from a level two holster and fire one shot from (depending upon when they start shooting as the gun is coming up) one and one half to one and nine tenth seconds. Even if the officer has their gun out, their finger on the trigger with the slack taken out of the trigger, with their gun aimed and ready, and the officer attentive and ready to react--the average officer would take just under a third of a second to pull the trigger, in the clearest possible circumstances. Subsequently even in the fastest possible reaction scenarios the officer can be shot at, twice before they can react and shoot back. This definitely puts the officer behind the reaction curve in this type of situation.

Doc. 67, Exhibit 27, paragraphs 16 and 17.

Plaintiffs offer no summary judgment evidence to rebut this expert evidence, and they have identified no evidence in this record that could prove that there is not one reasonable police officer who would have perceived a threat of serious injury from Robbie Tolan's quick and aggressive actions. Sergeant Cotton misinterpreted Robbie Tolan's intended actions, but his firing on Robbie Tolan did not violate Robbie Tolan's constitutional rights because Sergeant Cotton feared for his life and could reasonably have believed the shooting was necessary under the totality of the factual circumstances evidenced by the summary judgment record. Robbie Tolan's claims of excessive force against Sergeant Cotton must be dismissed.

App. 90

Having considered all issues raised in the Defendants' motion for summary judgment for qualified immunity, the Court finds that the Plaintiffs have not established that Defendants' Jeffrey Wayne Cotton and John C. Edwards violated their constitutional rights. Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED that Defendants' Jeffrey Wayne Cotton's and John C. Edwards's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 67) is GRANTED.

SIGNED at Houston, Texas, this 31st day of March, 2012.

/s/ Melinda Harmon
MELINDA HARMON
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

APPENDIX D

---

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 12-20296

[Filed August 1, 2013]

---

ROBERT R. TOLAN; MARIAN TOLAN,	)
	)
Plaintiffs - Appellants	)
	)
v.	)
	)
JEFFREY WAYNE COTTON,	)
	)
Defendant - Appellee	)

---

Appeals from the United States District Court
for the Southern District of Texas

ON PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC
(Opinion 25 April 2013, 713 F.3d 299)

Before JONES, BARKSDALE, and SOUTHWICK,
Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM:

App. 92

The court having been polled, and a majority of the judges who are in regular active service and not disqualified not having voted in favor (Fed. R. App. P. And 5th Cir. R. 35), rehearing en banc is DENIED.

Voting for en-banc rehearing were: Judge James L. Dennis, Judge Jennifer Walker Elrod, and Judge James E. Graves, Jr. Voting against were: Chief Judge Carl E. Stewart, Judge Carolyn Dineen King, Judge E. Grady Jolly, Judge W. Eugene Davis, Judge Edith H. Jones, Judge Jerry E. Smith, Judge Edith Brown Clement, Judge Edward C. Prado, Judge Priscilla R. Owen, Judge Leslie H. Southwick, Judge Catharina Haynes, and Judge Stephen A. Higginson.

Upon the filing of this order, the clerk shall issue the mandate forthwith. See Fed. R. App. P. 41(b).

ENTERED FOR THE COURT:

/s/ Rhesa Hawkins Barksdale
RHESA HAWKINS BARKSDALE
UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE

DENNIS, Circuit Judge, joined by GRAVES, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

I respectfully but emphatically dissent from the court's failure to rehear this case en banc. The panel opinion contains three serious errors that should be corrected by this court en banc or by the Supreme Court: (1) The panel opinion erroneously assumes that the Supreme Court's decision in Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223 (2009), authorizes it to skip the first prong of the Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194 (2001), analysis and grant Sergeant Jeffrey Wayne Cotton qualified immunity, despite there being no argument or evidence that Cotton's actions were based on his reasonable mistake of law; consequently, the panel opinion does not correctly apply either prong of the Saucier analysis, but uses a confused jumble of parts of each prong to justify its decision and reach the wrong conclusion; (2) The panel opinion erroneously and misleadingly represents that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact in this case; (3) The panel opinion erroneously and misleadingly represents facts that are genuinely disputed as being undisputed.

1.

In Saucier v. Katz, the Court mandated a two-step sequence for resolving government officials' qualified immunity claims. First, "a court must decide whether the facts that a plaintiff has alleged (see Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), (c)) or shown (see Rules 50, 56) make out a violation of a constitutional right." Pearson, 555 U.S. at 232(citing Saucier, 533 U.S. at 201). Second, "if the plaintiff has satisfied this first step, the court must decide whether the right at issue was 'clearly established' at the time of defendant's alleged misconduct." Id. Qualified immunity is applicable unless the official's conduct violated a clearly established constitutional right. Id. (citing Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 640 (1987)).

In Pearson, the Court held that while the sequence set forth in Saucier is often appropriate, it should no longer be regarded as mandatory. Id. at 236. "The judges of the district courts and the courts of appeals should be permitted to exercise their sound discretion in deciding which of the two prongs of the qualified immunity analysis should be addressed first in light of the circumstances in the particular case at hand.” Id. Importantly, the Court in Pearson did not change the substance or the purpose of the two Saucier prongs. It merely recognized that lower courts should have the discretion to decide whether following the two prongs in sequence as originally set forth by Saucier is worthwhile in particular cases. Id. at 242.

The panel opinion, in a very confused and erroneous manner, claims that it “do[es] not reach whether Sergeant Cotton’s shooting Robbie Tolan violated his Fourth Amendment right against excessive force (as noted, the district court relied on this first prong of qualified-immunity analysis).” Tolan v. Cotton, 713 F.3d 299, 306 (5th Cir. 2013). Instead, the panel opinion concludes that “showing violation of a constitutional right does not end the inquiry when qualified immunity properly has been invoked. Sergeant Cotton is entitled, through summary judgment, to qualified immunity under the second prong of the analysis.” Id.

After the panel opinion states that it will use only the Saucier second prong analysis to decide this case, one would expect it to address whether Cotton made a reasonable mistake of law in using deadly force against Robbie, for that is the purpose of the second prong.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> See Saucier, 533 U.S. at 205 (“The concern of the immunity inquiry is to acknowledge that reasonable mistakes can be made as to the legal constraints on particular police conduct. It is sometimes difficult for an officer to determine how the relevant legal doctrine, here excessive force, will apply to the factual

But it does not do so. Indeed, the panel opinion does not correctly apply either Saucier's substantive first-prong factual analysis or its second-prong legal analysis. Instead, it applies an amalgam of the two: something that it called a second-prong legal analysis but which has all the earmarks of a first-prong fact-intensive inquiry. As a result, the panel opinion, in making a purported second-prong inquiry, fails entirely to assess whether an objective officer in Cotton's position could have made a mistake of law and instead performs what appears to be an erroneous, partial, and distorted Saucier first-prong analysis to conclude that summary judgment based on qualified immunity is proper. See Tolan, 713 F.3d at 307-08. Why does the panel opinion announce that, unlike the district court, it will not use the first Saucier prong to start its analysis of this case? A proper application of the first prong, including a proper application of summary judgment law as well as a proper application of Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386 (1989), and Pearson would have correctly led only to the conclusion that there are genuine issues as to material facts whether Cotton objectively and reasonably feared for his life when he shot to kill Robbie; and that the parties' submissions, properly viewed favorably to the plaintiff, could show that the officer's conduct violated clearly established Fourth Amendment law. Why does the panel opinion say that it will use the Saucier second situation the officer confronts. An officer might correctly perceive all of the relevant facts but have a mistaken understanding as to whether a particular amount of force is legal in those circumstances. If the officer's mistake as to what the law requires is reasonable, however, the officer is entitled to the immunity defense.") prong only, but end up using mostly first-prong language in its reasoning? A Saucier second-prong inquiry was not an appropriate starting point because Cotton never testified that he shot Robbie because he made a reasonable mistake as to the legal constraints on his particular conduct in this case. If the panel had asked and answered these questions it could have avoided its mistakes and the unfortunate circuit precedent it makes in this case.

---

2.

In pursuing its confused Saucier second prong analysis, the panel opinion further compounds its errors by representing that several genuinely disputed material facts are really undisputed and by incorrectly representing that the disputed facts are not material. Specifically, the panel opinion presumes that the Tolans' front porch was not well lit despite the plaintiffs' evidence that it was reasonably well lit by lights on the porch, in the yard, and from Officer John Edwards's car spotlight and his flashlight; that Marian Tolan was argumentative and refused orders to remain calm, though she and her husband testified that she was calm and merely explained to both officers that she and her husband owned the Nissan and house and that Robbie lived there with them; that Cotton merely guided Marian toward the garage door despite the Tolans' testimony that he dragged her and shoved her into the metal garage door; and that Robbie moved to intervene in Cotton's treatment of Marian, despite the Tolans' testimony and physical blood-spot evidence that indicated that Robbie had not moved toward Cotton when Cotton shot him. The parties also dispute whether Cotton slammed Marian against the garage door before or after Robbie began to get up, turned toward Cotton, and told him to unhand his mother; whether Robbie was kneeling or crouching when Cotton shot him; where Robbie's hands were and whether he reached toward his waistband; and whether Cotton issued any verbal warning before shooting Robbie with deadly force. Ultimately, the panel opinion's pro-defendant recitation of facts fails to address evidence that, when viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, creates genuine issues of material fact as to whether an objective officer in Cotton's position could have reasonably and objectively believed that Robbie posed an immediate, significant threat of substantial injury to him.

Resolving the disputed facts reasonably in favor of the plaintiffs, the evidence shows that when Cotton arrived at the Tolans' residence, the Nissan that Edwards had misidentified as stolen was parked in front of the house, Robbie and Cooper were prone on the porch and on the ground, respectively, Bobby—Robbie's father—had his hands against the other car in the driveway, and Marian—Robbie's mother, a middle-aged woman in her pajamas whom Cotton believed to be the homeowner—was explaining to Edwards that she and Bobby owned the Nissan while Edwards had his pistol trained on Robbie and Cooper. Marian and Bobby had already explained to Edwards that he was mistaken in believing the Nissan to be stolen, that they owned the house and the Nissan, that Robbie lived with them, and that Robbie and Cooper were their son and nephew, respectively. Robbie was prone on the porch toward and near the front door of the house. When Cotton arrived, Marian explained to Cotton that she and Bobby owned the Nissan, the house, and that Robbie was their son. Cotton immediately ordered Marian to move to the garage door. She began to comply, then stopped to again explain the officers' mistake to Cotton. Cotton grabbed her arm, pulled her to the garage, and slammed her up against it so hard that she slid to the ground. At this point, Cotton had a clear and full view of Robbie who was lying approximately 15 to 20 feet away. When Robbie saw and heard his mother being thrown against the garage door, he pushed himself up and turned around to face Cotton while saying, "get your fucking hands off my mom." Without issuing any warning, Cotton unholstered his weapon, pointed it at Robbie, and shot at him three times, striking him once in the chest. The force of the bullet drove him backwards against the front door, leaving his blood stain near the front door. The bullet collapsed Robbie's lung and lodged in his liver. Robbie was squatting or on his knees when he was shot. Robbie had no weapon and had not made any sort of reaching movement toward his waistband. Edwards trained his weapon on Robbie when he heard Robbie speak, but did not issue a warning or fire his weapon. The officers found, belatedly, that the Nissan had not been reported stolen and that neither Robbie, Cooper, nor any of the Tolans were armed.

Taking the undisputed facts of this case and resolving the disputed facts reasonably in the nonmovant plaintiffs' favor, the summary judgment record clearly shows that a jury reasonably could find that Cotton used excessive force against Robbie and Marian and that he did not warrant qualified immunity because the law was so clearly established that an objectively reasonable officer in Cotton's position would have known that his actions violated

Robbie and Marian's Fourth Amendment rights. Only by failing to adhere to proper summary judgment law and by misapplying the two-prong qualified immunity analysis was the panel opinion able to conclude otherwise.

CONCLUSION

The panel opinion erroneously interprets the Supreme Court's decision in Pearson to authorize it not only to skip the first prong of the Saucier analysis, but also to misapply as its Saucier second-prong analysis an amalgam of both prongs, so that it applies neither prong fully and correctly. Also, the panel opinion misapplies summary-judgment law by dismissing undisputed facts as inconsequential and resolving material facts genuinely at issue in the defendant's favor rather than in favor of the plaintiff. If the panel opinion had applied the Saucier prongs correctly it would have concluded that the facts that the plaintiffs have shown make out a violation of their constitutional right to be free from excessive and deadly force by a police officer; that this right was "clearly established" at the time that Cotton violated their rights by using excessive force against Marian Tolan and deadly force against Robbie Tolan; and that Officer Cotton is not entitled to qualified immunity because, under the facts shown by the parties' submissions, a reasonable jury could find that an objectively reasonable officer would have known that Robbie Tolan did not pose an immediate, significant threat to the officer's life and that the officer's use of deadly force without forewarning was therefore not justifiable.

---

APPENDIX E

---

Transcript Excerpts

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF
HARRIS COUNTY, TEXAS
232ND JUDICIAL DISTRICT

Trial Court No. 1210528

May 6, 2010

EXCERPT OF PROCEEDINGS

---

STATE OF TEXAS     ) Appellant         )
                          )
VS.                    )
                          )
JEFFREY COTTON     ) Appellee.         )

---

                          )

Excerpts of Direct Examination of Robert Ryan Tolan

* * *

[p.145]

* * *

I had been in the house for 15 years, I went to Bellaire High School. I wasn't a stranger. I had been there so when he refused to listen I'm saying hey this is my car, this is my house, this is where I live. No get on the ground. Get on the ground. Now I'm getting a little irritated.

App. 101

Q. Do you start mouthing off?

A. No. I just kept asking him why. Why? No, sir this is my car. Sir this is my car. This is my house. I live here.

* * *

Excerpts of Robert R. Tolan
Deposition Transcript,
October 26, 2010

* * *

[p.110]

* * *

Q. (BY MR. HELFAND) What is it that you did or said that you think indicated you had no intention of coming toward the officer?

A. Well, sir, I didn't jump up off the ground. I just simply got up. Started to get up. So --

Q. Okay.

A. I mean, he could have yelled at me to get back down, or could have just pointed his gun at me but he didn't. He pointed and fired. So --

* * *

[p.150]

* * *

A. I didn't run at him. I didn't jump up and make any crazy movements.

Q. All right. You don't think getting up off the ground when you have been told to lay down and turning around and screaming at the officer is a crazy movement at the time?

App. 103

A. Crazy? No, sir. At the time, no, sir. Sir, I was not screaming. They were just words.

* * *

Excerpts of Jeffrey Cotton
Deposition Transcript,
November 15, 2010

* * *

[p.84]

* * *

Q. (By Mr. Berg) Okay. You didn't say, Stop?

A. I did verbalize, yes.

Q. What did you say?

A. Either stop or no.

Q. As he was -- as you perceived him getting up?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. What was his response to your verbalization?

A. There was no change in his response.

Q. He continued reaching for his waistband?

* * *

App. 105

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF
HARRIS COUNTY, TEXAS
232ND JUDICIAL DISTRICT

Trial Court No. 1210528

May 6, 2010

EXCERPT OF PROCEEDINGS

_____
STATE OF TEXAS ) Appellant )
)
VS. )
)
JEFFREY COTTON )
Appellee. )
_____)

Excerpts of Direct Examination of Marian Tolan

* * *

[p.104]

* * *

A. Yes. Yes. But he was still looking. When I hit the garage door and I looked at him and he looked to the right and then he looked to the left and when he looked to the left is when he addressed him. And --

Q. What happened next?

App. 106

A. The officer did not say a word. He didn't say get back down. He didn't say stay down. He didn't say a word. He just shot.

Q. Did Robbie get up?

A. No, sir.

* * *